Tucker Gets Kick Out of Prawn Shop Which Collects Guns

By GEORGE TUCKER

Thursday, March 14

The Sunday morning, March 10th, I was going to try to sell a few of the guns to a gun dealer, but I didn't. I had a good reason for it-a "kick," as the newspaper man said, when the story of the guns was printed.

I'm a gun dealer, and I've been doing business for years. I've sold guns to all kinds of people, from milkmen to millionaires. I've seen the guns change hands, and I've seen them work their way into the hands of the wrong people.

But this time, I had to kick the guns out of the prawn shop. It was a kick, all right. But it was a kick that I had to take. I had no choice. I had to do it.

The kick started when I read the story. It was a story in the Sunday papers. It was about a prawn shop that had been robbed. The robbers had taken a lot of guns, and they had taken them out of the shop.

I was shocked. I was angry. I was determined to do something about it. I decided to kick the guns out of the prawn shop. I knew I couldn't do it alone. I needed help. I needed the help of the police, and I needed the help of the gun dealers.

So I went to the police. I told them about the story. I told them about the kick. I told them that I was determined to do something about it.

The police were interested. They were determined to do something about it. They started to investigate. They started to look into the matter. They started to track down the robbers.

But it was too late. The guns were already out of the prawn shop. The robbers had already taken them. It was too late to do anything about it.

That's why I kicked the guns out of the prawn shop. I knew I couldn't do it alone. I needed help. I needed the help of the police, and I needed the help of the gun dealers. And I knew I couldn't do it alone.

So I kicked the guns out of the prawn shop. And I'm glad I did it. I'm glad I kicked the guns out of the prawn shop. It was a kick, all right. But it was a kick that I had to take. I had no choice. I had to do it.
