

This PRIDE in America--

A Salute to the Stars and Stripes Originated in a Deep Sense of National Loyalty. Is There a Difference Today?

Saluting the Flag

Across the nation, members of that sect known as Jehovah's Witnesses have been running into difficulties on a number of counts, chiefly their refusal, for religious reasons, to salute the Stars and Stripes of the United States of America.

Members of the sect have been accused of seditious activities, of fifth column tactics, and their refusal to salute the American flag has been a stepping stone for the law to pin upon them charges of un-Americanism.

Back in days when American freedom was a sudden, vital thing, when the Stars and Stripes first made its appearance as a symbol of a new, hopeful, prosperous nation, the salute of the flag came as an outgrowth of a deep-seated sense of loyalty and devotion to this new America. It was a heart-felt, spontaneous salute to something for which men had proudly fought and died.

Time Deleted the Meaning

As the years passed and the nation grew into era after era of peaceful, abundant security, the original meaning of that salute of the flag began to disappear into the mist of history which filled an ever-increasing void between past and present. But the custom lived on, became established tradition, and remains a symbol of loyalty to a great nation.

But as generations passed through peaceful years, the meaning of that original salute to the flag wore out. Grandchildren and great grandchildren couldn't be expected to feel what ancestors of a revolutionary time had felt—not until the World war had brought a new sense of awareness to the citizens of the nation.

The 1940 Return of Significance

But that sense, too, wore off, in the post-war period. Now it is returning in a new significance during these days when democratic America once again feels from its heart when it voices its salutation to a symbol of American democratic freedom.

The highest tribunal of the nation, in a recent decision, backed a school board who ousted youngsters from their local school for refusing to salute the flag.

The flag, said the court, is a symbol of a great nation. It is the duty of the citizenry of that nation to recognize it.

It is unfortunate that every American, native or adopted, does not feel deeply his sense of duty to America. It is unfortunate that the religion, the sanctity of which no one questions, of one particular sect (and there are others) should find saluting the flag incompatible with their worship of an Almighty God.

But Intolerance Grows

It is unfortunate, too, that the more deeply the some feel a sense of national duty and honor, the more intolerant they become of the some who do not.

Our plea is not for those who refuse to salute the flag for religious reasons, for we find loyalty to nation compatible with our own sense of loyalty to God, though God and nation be not the same.

But a sense of duty to nation must not lead to wholesale persecution of those who do not feel that duty, or who feel a greater duty. They must be taught that the two are compatible.

There Must Be an Awareness

A refusal to salute the flag must not be taken, in and of itself, as an indication of un-Americanism.

Those who feel such an awareness must realize that there may be justification for those who do not. Locking them up for that alone gains nothing, weakens freedom.

Our plea is for an individual awareness of America, its greatness and its potentialities even in the face of crises. Americans must think of the meaning of a heritage too many recognize only as a word. Saluting the flag must come to mean what it meant when that custom began. It must be regarded as an honor, not a duty.

It must be so regarded by all who value their Americanism, because of, in part, or in spite of religious or other beliefs.

NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS

By PAUL MALLON

Writers, Too, Are Human Prophets

WASHINGTON—Some of my columnar colleagues have fallen into weeping over a tendency in journalism to predict the future. One of them has constantly described his own inclination to see what's coming as a "weakness." Another has alliteratively alleged that "prediction, prophecy, and prognostication are phooey." There are only two of the most recent examples of a rising tendency to deride any journalistic efforts to calculate beyond the past and present tenses.

I think they are all wrong. Not a thinking person exists in the world today who is not making some preparation or precaution concerning tomorrow. There is not a business man, worthy to be called such, who is not trying to muster every bit of information and advice he can get concerning what is to be expected politically and economically. There is no statesman or politician in Washington who can afford to deal solely with the past and the present. His real measure of efficiency in public service may be based on his calculations of the future and what will be required then.

F.D.R.'s FORESIGHT

The fact that Mr. Roosevelt wisely anticipated the war did much to make this government and the country ready for the policies that had to be adopted swiftly when it broke. If he had also been given the wisdom to have suspected the French collapse, you can readily see how much better a national defense position this country would now have.

If prognosticating is a weakness so is thinking. If looking into the future is a sin, man's cranium has been misplaced and his face should have been faced sideways or looking backwards.

IN THE MENTAL PIT

I think the criers have fallen unwittingly into a mental pit dug for them by the politicians. Naturally a man in public life does not want a lot of public predictions made about what he may do, or about how what he is doing may turn out. Such predictions may arouse public pressure against his purpose, may cause him to change his decision, or at least annoy him. Mr. Roosevelt has frequently complained in press conferences against in-journalistic predictions. He calls it "going out on a limb." But he never has been heard to complain about a prediction which was satisfactory to his political purposes.

Naturally, the statesmen would like to have the newspapers deal only with their past acts although they themselves do not handle their own jobs that way. But I do not see why the reading public, which must plan for its own future should be denied that one-third of reporting merely to keep politicians from being annoyed. I do not see what right politicians have anyway even to suggest new ideals and ethics for journalism. They are admittedly prejudiced witnesses under cross examination. Most of the bad political speculation that gets into print is due to bad prompting of reporters by the same politicians working for their own purposes.

PROPHETS ARE HUMAN—My weeping colleagues would not think of requiring business expert columnists to restrain themselves from calculating the future. No suggestion has yet been made or ever will be made that a racing expert, sent to cover the Kentucky derby, be required not to express an opinion as to whom he thinks will win. Why should politics be immune?

If my friends contend that the business, racing and political writers too seldom predict the winner, I will agree without reservation. But that is not important to my way of thinking. If it means anything at all, it only means there should be better experts, but I doubt that it even means that.

When a racing reporter goes to Louisville in advance of the derby and tells his readers he thinks "Hashed Thinking will win in a walk," he is giving his estimation of the calibre of the entries in the race to the best of his knowledge and ability. He is presenting his estimation in the simplest possible and most easily understandable manner. That is his duty and the public's right. If a long shot happens to win the race, I cannot see that it proves this type of journalism is a weakness.

All that the critics of prophecy are really saying, it seems to me, is that prophets are human.

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

Three New Pictures Pass in Review

By ROBBIN COONS
HOLLYWOOD—"They Drive by Night." Screenplay by Jerry Wald and Richard Macaulay. Directed by Raoul Walsh. Principals: Ann Sheridan, George Raft, Humphrey Bogart, Gale Page, Ida Lupino, Alan Hale.

The news in this one is that the Lupino girl creeps up on the production and bags it for her own with a performance which challenges the queen of the movies, Miss Bette Davis.
The film in which Ida, one-time exponent of giddy collegiennes and light-headed blondes, does her stuff is a melodrama of commercial trucking. It delves interestingly and with a liberal sprinkling of salty dialogue into the problems of the "independent" truck-driver (Raft) who follows the killing, sleepless trail between Los Angeles and San Francisco, his great ambition to have his own fleet.
Bogart plays his brother, eventually the victim of an accident which kills Raft's hopes and sends him to work for rich, gruff and hearty Hale.

Miss Lupino has come into the picture ere this, for she is Hale's wife, dopey over Raft despite his loyalty to Hale and his interest in a roadside lunch counter waitress (Sheridan).
After Ida has murdered her husband, hoping to get Raft, she resorts in jealous fury to a "confession" pinning the blame on him. These scenes, and ensuing sequences in which the actress delineates the gradual breakdown of a neurotic mind, are forceful and memorable.

Raft is well cast, Bogart is as good as usual, and Miss Sheridan (at least until Miss Lupino takes over) is noticeably omphish. After the steal, however, Annie's just the nice girl in the background.

"The Man I Married." Joan Bennett, Francis Lederer, Lloyd Nolan.

The man she married was an agreeable, almost-naturalized American of German birth, but in 1938 they went to Germany on business. The two of them saw Nazi Germany, with its growing power and "social progress," through different eyes. Husband (Lederer) finally became such an enthusiastic Nazi that he planned to divorce his wife to marry a Nazi blonde (Anna Sten). The wife (Bennett), seeing the "revolution" through American eyes, is sickened. It remains for the husband's father (Otto Kruger) to pin back his Nazi ears, for a pleasant foreign correspondent (Nolan) to aid the wife and child (Johnny Russell) to escape to America.

"Young People." Shirley Temple, Jack Oakie, Charlotte Greenwood.

It's about a couple of vaudevillians who retire to a neat, self-centered New England town in order to give their adopted child, erstwhile of their act, a "normal" life. They get the cold shoulder, but there's that hurricane again, and the hearts of gold triumph. Shirley, no longer a goldilocks, sings and dances and emotes with her usual charm, demonstrating that there's plenty of life in the old girl yet.

A Vacation Every Day

Everyone needs a vacation. But not everyone gets one. Some people just get two weeks with pay—or without pay. As far as that goes, some people have been out of a job for years.

August is the month of vacations for Iowa City residents and summer school students. Most of us are already straining at the leash, wishing to be away on a mad dash hither and yon at 450 miles a day. Some of us will average 60 miles an hour on the road and play 36 holes of golf every day while we are "there"—wherever it is we are going.

If this is the kind of vacation you are going to take—don't. Save your money. And save yourself.
A vacation is not an endurance contest—or any other kind of a contest.

What Is a Vacation?
A vacation is a respite, a rest, a time for renewal of zest, for recreation of the spirit of living.

That is what everyone needs. And we need it, not once a year, not for two weeks or a month, not just in the summer time—but every day.
To live in the grip of routine, under external compulsion, to live automatically, to live for some future let-up, is not to live at all. Yet millions of potentially vital Americans strangle themselves in the net of habit and unimaginative living.

Snap out of it! The important thing is change. Look at yourself from a new angle. Sound out some of the people you have been passing by every day with a nod. A short conversation will give you some new ideas if you are wide awake. People are interesting—not people a thousand miles away, but all people, including yourself.

Find yourself. Daydream. Think. If you really do you will be on a perpetual vacation.

Have You Tried Being You?
Be you. Don't say you haven't time to do the things you would like to do. Life is too short to spend it doing anything else.

Let yourself go! Whatever you enjoy—taking pictures or looking at them, cooking or eating, playing music or listening to it—take time for it.
And be contented. This does not mean to stifle discontent. It means to sample all the pleasures of the situation you are in—your job, your home, your associates and neighbors. Pleasures lie about you, and within yourself. Sample them daily. Don't squeeze them; life cannot be forced; it should be accepted and appreciated.

Keep your vacation up to date. Then you are sure of getting it.

Johnson County's Butter

Butter from this Johnson county, according to an analysis of butter distribution sponsored by the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, will be spread on the bread of 78,000 persons living in the eastern half of the United States this year.

Iowa has produced nearly 250,000,000 pounds of butter a year in recent years. Production in Johnson county is expected to total 1,900,000 pounds this year.
That, in anybody's vernacular, is a lot of butter.

A Man About MANHATTAN

Names Mean a Lot to Him, Time and Distance Nothing

BY GEORGE TUCKER
NEW YORK—We were having the real pie in Sam's at lunch yesterday when Monte Proser dropped into an adjoining chair. Monte is a young man with horn-rim glasses, a sad smile, and a conviction that disappointment is the inevitable reward for those who expect too much from life.

This is by no means the melancholy philosophy of a young man who has been frustrated by life. No doubt at times he feels frustrated, but a careful analysis of his deeds and experiments reveals something of the salt of variety, of changing color, of sunny days as well as glum ones. Monte used to be a hobo. He has been known to Broadway since the early days of repeal. He has been a press agent. He has shipped on cattle boats and slept in open fields. Once he worked for Herbert Hoover. Once he was a guide in Yellowstone Park. He is a restaurant owner now, or rather a night club owner. And in recent months he has been rather widely heralded as the father of the "zombie."

Almost everybody in New York knows what the zombie is. It is an after-dark beverage so powerful that not more than two may be sold to a customer. This, of course, is strictly the okra soup. A man's capacity is his own business, though personally I would be afraid to travel in the company of people who could, or would want to, carry more than two of those tall rum-inspired concoctions under their belts.

The zombie, so far as Manhattan is concerned, first made its appearance in Proser's Broadway restaurant about eight months ago. This was the Beachcomber which now, like Woolworth's and the A&P stores, has become a chain, with sister clubs throughout the country. After the lean days, some of which were shadow-thin, Monte is back in the sunshine, though his smile remains as melancholy as ever. A Puerto Rican company even has contracted to put out zombies in bottles. You would think that this would bring some sense of elation. But these are strange times. Monte's way of expressing satisfaction is a sort of half-hearted shrug. That is hard to explain, but then most things about Monte are hard to explain.

Once he sent me a canary without any explanation. It was in the winter. I took the bird out into the snow, where the sunlight was strong, to take its picture. A few days later it died of pneumonia. Monte's reaction was typical. "That's the trouble with this climate," he said. "You can't even keep canary birds."

On another occasion I was to meet him at Dempsey's on Broadway because Jim Tully was going to be there, and when Tully is in town it is natural for anyone who has ever ridden the rods to gather around. Tully is a man who, like Jack London, used his hobo days as a springboard to literary fame.
But Monte wasn't there. Next day came a wire from Dempsey's hotel—in Miami. "What detains you?" the wire wanted to know.

That, in a way, is definitive of Monte Proser. Names mean a lot to him—time and distance nothing at all.

In 'Tobias and the Angel'

Little Tobias of James Bridie's imaginative comedy, "Tobias and the Angel," opening tomorrow night in University theater, braves death at the hands of the Demon Asmodey when he signs the contract to marry Sara while her father stands by with his pick and mattock to dig the grave. Pictured above are Stewart Dobbin, as Tobias, and Dale Kohn of Chicago as Sara. The play, with the leading roles doubled, is under the direction of Thomas Wood Stevens.

'Tobias and the Angel' to Be Final Play

Thomas Wood Stevens Directs Comedy Based on Bible Story

The tears of the season's dramatic triumph, "The Wingless Victory," will be replaced by laughter when James Bridie's imaginative comedy, "Tobias and the Angel," opens in University theater tomorrow night as the sixth and last production for the summer. Thomas Wood Stevens is director.

"The play is a dramatization in very modern terms," said Director Stevens, "of the Book of Tobit, which is one of the best short stories of the Bible."

Playwright Bridie has fashioned the story with some new and modern angles "which provide," said Stevens, "some of the most interesting things in the play."

The fish, however, wasn't the only unusual property the crew had to assemble. Julien Benjamin of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Dale King of Walla Walla, Wash., constructed a zither for Dorothy Dunkelberger of Sedgwick, Kan., who is cast as Sherah, to play. Frank B. Willis of Ashland, Ky., had to make a goatskin bag, using a hot water bottle and leather for the project.

Lewis McFarland of Des Moines has designed the attractive settings. A novel variation in setting the stage will be used in this week's production, Director Stevens said.

A summer season that has seen a variety of plays uses as a closing motto, "Always leave them laughing." And so you have Tobias and his guardian angel.

First Annual All-Star - Pros College Boys Prove Capable of Turning Back Strong Pros

By WILFRID SMITH CHICAGO, July 27—The annual game between the All-Star football players from the nation's universities and colleges and the champions of the National Professional league was established as a contest in the first game in 1934 when the college players held the Chicago Bears to a scoreless tie.

Before this inaugural game, with the fans confident that the Bears would win by four or five touchdowns, many had erroneously concluded that at best the game would only be an exhibition. The professionals, so these argued, were too strong, had the advantage of campaigning together, and the mighty Bronko Nagurski, probably the greatest fullback of all time, should rip the college line at will. Red Grange, one time galloping ghost from Illinois, and still regarded as one of the shrewdest analysts of football strategy, was another bulwark of the Bears.

Noble Kizer, director of athletics at Purdue university; Dick Hanley, then at Northwestern, and Jimmy Crowley, Fordham's genial Irishman, who was a member of the celebrated Four Horsemen backfield at Notre Dame a decade before, were elected coaches of the first All-Star team.

It is not too much to say that the scoreless tie on the night of Aug. 31 was a moral victory for the college boys. Faced by nearly unanimous skepticism, they dealt the professionals a resounding blow and forecast the following games which now finds professionals and All-Stars tied with two victories each and two ties.

This game should have taught all professional teams not to underestimate the enthusiasm and ability of the collegians. That the Green Bay Packers, who were beaten 6 to 0 three years ago also were over confident is only more reason why this year's All-Star game in Soldiers' Field offered additional thrills. The Packers are coming back for another attempt on Aug. 29 and on their roster are men who previously starred in this unique series. One immediately recalls Cecil Isbell, voted the outstanding player on the All-Star team of 1933. Then, too, there's Joe Laws, of Iowa, who played against the Bears in 1934.

In any survey of the thrills in this initial game the startling achievement of the All-Star defense in stopping Nagurski with a net loss of one yard in nine smashes at the line and holding the Bears to no first downs by rushing stand out. Moreover, the All-Stars outgained the Bears 158 yards to 123 and intercepted four of the Bears' 12 passes.

Chuck Bernard, Michigan's great center; hard hitting Mike Mikulak, Oregon fullback; Ed Krause, one of Notre Dame's greatest tackles who was paired with Ade Schwammel, of Oregon State; Edgar Manske, Northwestern, and Joe Skladany, of Pittsburgh, the ends, were the heroes in that front line defense. But the game wasn't merely a scrap of gigantic linemen. The Bears' air attack functioned successfully, with George Corbett passing, to reach the All-Stars' 9 yard line. But on first down, Bill Hewitt fumbled a wide lateral and Krause grabbed the ball for the All-Stars.

Solters' Homer Beats Yankees In Twelfth, 6-5

CHICAGO, July 27 (AP)—For most of this very warm afternoon, Big Moose Solters might just as well have had a lolly pop in his hands as a baseball bat when he stepped up to the plate for the White Sox against the New York Yankees.

But in the 12th inning, when it came time to maintain the Yanks' record for losing overtime games, the Moose obliged by poking one of Marv Bruer's slants into the left field seats for his ninth homer of the year and a 6 to 5 victory for the Sox, ending a "comedy of errors" performance by both sides.

Annual Inter-Playground Field, Track Meet to Be Thursday

Added Feature Will Be Part Of Program

Decathlon Contest Scheduled for Boys In Certain Age Group

The annual inter-playground track and field meet, the feature special event of the summer playground season in Iowa City, has been scheduled for Thursday afternoon on the Longfellow playground, it was announced yesterday.

An added feature to this year's event will be the decathlon contest or all-around athletic championship for senior boys 16, 17 and 18 years of age.

Included in this decathlon competition will be a 12-inch softball throw for distance, running broad jump, high jumping and a 100-yard dash. Each senior boy entered in this event will take part in all four of the parts with the total points for all parts determining the decathlon champion.

Preliminaries
Preliminary contests to determine the six decathlon finalists will be held Wednesday morning at the Longfellow school playground, the announcement said. Any 16, 17 or 18 year old boy with residence in Iowa City may take part in the preliminaries.

Senior boys do not have to be registered at playgrounds to be eligible as all boys will compete in this event unattached. The six boys with the highest totals in Wednesday morning's contests will compete in the Thursday afternoon finals.

The first place winner on Thursday will receive an individual sun-gold trophy for permanent possession and second and third place winners will receive silver and bronze watch chain medals. Fourth, fifth and sixth place winners will receive ribbon awards.

Events in the track and field meet itself will include separate contests for boys and girls with all events coming under an A or B classification. Class A contests will be for girls or boys 13, 14 and 15 and class B contests for girls or boys 12 and under.

Scoring Method
All class A and B competitors will be competing under the colors of their respective playgrounds and will receive team points in each event according to their finish position. Accordingly, five points will be given for first place, three points for second and two points for third. In addition to team points each successful competitor will receive an award ribbon for finishing first, second or third.

Raids---

Wales, and Hastings. But even the nazi report mentioned no fresh claims to aerial blows on Britain's harried shipping.

Bombs Miss
A lone raider attacked a vessel in the English channel, but was chased off by British fighters after missing with six bombs. Offensively, the air ministry reported attacks on German oil reservoirs at Cherbourg, St. Nazaire and Nantes, in France, and on the Dortmund power station and airfields of Schiphol and Wallhaven, in the Netherlands. One British plane, it acknowledged, failed to return.

"Today an aircraft of the coastal command successfully bombed an enemy ship off the Norwegian coast," it added. "The crew was seen to abandon ship."

Chaser Planes
Royal air force planes, rimming the isles in constant vigil, repeatedly soared above low-hanging clouds to wheel and dive on the German planes before they could reach important objectives.

Three times during the day along the southeast coast swift chaser planes intercepted nazi squadrons. In one fight, a big black German bomber plunged into the sea. In another, officials said, each of four German planes dropped one bomb ineffectively.

Another German bomber appeared to be in difficulties after encountering British fighters in an attempted raid on a southeast Scottish town. The nazi emptied their bomb racks over the sea in flight from British spitfires.

the European possessions was said to be substantially the same as the "collective trusteeship" plan sponsored by the United States but the word "administration" was understood to have been substituted for "trusteeship."

This took the shape of a declaration of principles and an attached resolution provided that any American republic or republics could act to establish temporary control over any foreign colony in this hemisphere in which another foreign power sought to acquire an interest or domination menacing the security of the continent.

The resolution constituted virtually an expression of support from the other American republics to the United States in enforcing the Monroe Doctrine.

A companion convention becoming operative upon ratification by two thirds (14) of the American republics would provide the machinery for administering any colonies taken over until they could be safely returned to their original sovereigns or maintain stable self-government.

Commission Control
While administered in the name of all the ratifying nations, the colonies would be subject to direct control of a commission representing a small group of countries selected on the basis of geographic, economic and strategic considerations.

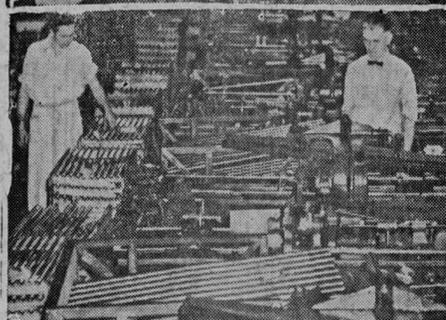

The economic plans called for strengthening and expanding the inter-American financial and economic advisory committee into the chief consultative medium for subsequent individual or collective negotiations among the republics.

One of the first tasks would be a solution of the export surplus problem, possibly through their purchase and withdrawal from the market by a cooperative but largely United States financed agency, and by loans from the import-export bank to governments to assist their exporters through the emergency.

Both the immediate and a longer-range plan of developing the inter-American economic system through commodity trade agreements were described as designed to enable any of the republics to be independent of foreign pressure in disposition of their products.

The foreign ministers, in the preliminary agreement, were said by an authoritative source to have accomplished to a surprising degree their original purpose of strengthening and advancing the will give parts of their country to both Hungary and Bulgaria. This source said that there was a virtual agreement that Rumania will yield some of the province of Transylvania to Hungary and some of Dobruja to Bulgaria, their former owners, and that there probably will be an exchange of minority populations.

Others in touch with Balkan capitals predicted that what remains of Rumania, in turn, would get a German-Italian guarantee of protection from Soviet Russia, which already has taken back its former province of Bessarabia.

Talks With Hitler
The Rumanians came here fresh from conversations with Adolf Hitler, and they received pointers from Premier Mussolini today on the part their nation will be expected to play in the "new Europe" planned by the axis if Germany and Italy beat England.

Coincidentally, the fascist press declared that Britain herself would have to fall in line politically with the axis-dominant scheme.

There was speculation in Rumanian circles on the possibility Rumania may show her new-found pro-axis friendship by inviting Italian and German specialists to take charge of her oil fields.

Such a gesture, it was explained, might discourage any possible Soviet designs on the rich producing areas from which the British and French are being ousted.

Rumanian Oil
A hint as to what Il Duce told Rumanian Premier Ion Gurgutu and Foreign Minister Mihail Manoilescu was given by the newspaper La Tribuna, which said Italy and Germany would expect Rumania to settle peacefully her territorial and other quarrels with her neighbors.

The meeting was believed also to have touched upon Italy's share of Rumanian oil.

"Superior continental interests require Rumania and Hungary and Rumania and Bulgaria to compose their differences with a spirit of justice which takes into account historic factors and the prospects for fruitful collaboration in the future," the newspaper asserted.

Collapse of French-British influence in the Balkans and the Danubian area was cited.

The authoritative commentary Relazione Internazionale declared England would have to adjust her political regime to the new European scheme.

"Until Great Britain has new leaders, and no less a new regime, its place in Europe is nothing," it said.

Virginia Gayda, who often reflects Mussolini's views, stressed in an article in Il Giornale d'Italia the importance of economic adjustments to be made in post-war Europe.

He forecast "a controlled economy no longer based on individual territories but a vaster European area."

Our Home Town

THE BUSINESS WOMAN

By Charles Beckman

Some day, some far-seeing historian of modern times will write a book on the American business woman. And not until then will we realize what a debt the country owes her.

Stop to realize that it was only a couple of generations ago when, for a woman to go into business was considered not quite refined. She might teach school or give piano or painting lessons—these came under the head of the arts; but to get out into the commercial life of the big, mad, business world, simply wasn't done.

Now you may smile at the naive decade of the "gay nineties" if you wish, but along about that time women began to filter into business in a big way. Perhaps they were inspired by that unusual character, Hetty Green, who had the savage bulls and bears of Wall Street eating so tamely out of her hand, but whatever the reason, from then on, an increasing number of women have aimed for and attained leadership in the mercantile fields. And today's lists of banking, department stores, catering, publishing and manufacturing executives show a surprising percentage of women.

Whether she is chairman of the board of some vast corporation or is merely conducting her own small business in her own small town, the American business woman brings to her work a knowledge of values, an appreciation of the public's needs, an aptitude for detail and an intuitive sense of proportion that most men never attain.

Next Sunday Mr. Beckman of Beckman's Funeral Home will comment on The Policeman.
