NAZIS TO SINK RED SEA SHIPPING

Rudolf Hess Tells Captors How Flight Was Planned

GLASGOW, Scotland, May 13 (AP)—Rudolf Hess told his captors how he secretly fitted an extra gasoline tank to a warplane and flew a bee-line from Augsburg, Germany, to Scotland with the route marked in blue pencil on a map.

The story of the Nazi chief deputy's coldly calculated flight from Adolf Hitler was related today by two homeguardsmen who took over Hess' custody late Saturday night after Hess parachuted onto Scottish field with an impact "around the world."

On him they found the map with the blue-pencilled Augsburg-Scotland route, and a quantity of compressed food.

The extra gasoline tank, fitted to the Messerschmitt 110 so that Hess could be certain he would have enough gasoline for the trip, was dropped in the sea as he crossed the Scottish coast, Hess related.

The home guardsmen, Jack Paterson and Robert Gibson, related also Hess' story of how he tried to land the plane—the first Messerschmitt he ever had flown.

"I circled over the spot where I finally parachuted for a long time," he said, "but in the darkness I could not see a suitable landing place."

"Then I climbed several thousand feet, threw the plane over its back and switched off the engine. Just as I was falling out I righted the machine again, switched on the engine and sent the plane hurtling to earth while I fell clear."

He said nothing about the 10 bullet holes found in the tail of the wrecked plane—indicating he either was fired upon by German pursuers or caught in the gunshots of British fighters. No such action by British pilots has been reported.

Paterson said Hess was completely calm when he talked to him; that he seemed more impressed by the availability of a drink of milk than by his own achievement, and that he gave his drinking cup to his guards as a souvenir.

The sturdy Scottish farmer who first approached Hess with a pitchfork, and the home guards to whom the farmer delivered him agreed that their remarkable prisoner was a polite, self-possessed fellow, and that they knew he must be important even though he was the No. 3 Nazi, making good on an escape outrivalling they did not at the time learn penny-dreadful fiction.

Claim America To Send Ships Into Red Sea

WASHINGTON, May 13 (AP)—The United States will ignore German warnings against sending ships into the Red sea and will rush plans for getting supplies into that gateway to the Mediterranean, informed circles believed tonight.

Nazi threats to extend sea and air warfare into the zone were anticipated here when President Roosevelt recently reopened that route to American shipping. The Berlin announcement therefore came as no surprise and was expected to have no effect on the government's plans.

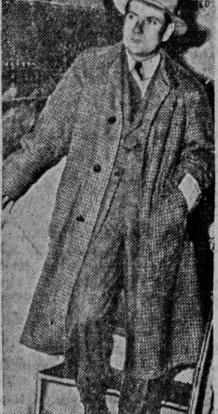

In New York today, intercoastal shipping operators who conferred with officials of the U. S. maritime commission asserted that they would turn over approximately 20 ships to the government within the next 30 days and 20 more by mid-July to rush supplies to Egypt along the Red sea route.

Moreover, it was believed that officials already had taken today's move by Germany into consideration in any steps to provide protection for any American merchant ships carrying supplies through the Red sea to Egypt.

What these steps were remained a secret, but Mr. Roosevelt has emphasized that naval patrols now operating over an extended area in the Atlantic also will go anywhere deemed necessary for the defense of the western hemisphere.

No official notice of the German blockade extension had been received tonight. The United States, however, consistently refused to recognize the legality of Germany's method of blockade and sea warfare.

Finishes Dad's Work

Lincoln Borglum, son of the late great sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, is pictured above arriving in Rapid City, S. It was the late Gutzon Borglum's wish his son carry on the task which ended for him when he died last March.

Warn of Danger Zone Facing Transportation

Make Announcement After President Roosevelt Had Opened Red Sea to American Shipments to East

BERLIN, (Wednesday) May 14 (AP)—In the face of President Roosevelt's opening of the Red sea to American shipping the German government formally announced early today that the northern part of the sea was an operating zone and that all vessels traveling there risked destruction.

Whether any American ships are in the area or en route there was not known publicly here.

No specific mention was made of the United States, but the warning to that country was plain.

Every ship traveling in the waters defined as an operations zone "exposes itself to destruction by mines or other weapons of war," the communique said.

Presumably mine-laying German planes and bombers will be sent into the Red sea zone in view of developments in the eastern Mediterranean.

German planes already have been active in the Suez canal zone to the north, and at least one German surface raider has been operating in the Indian ocean far to the south.

(The British recently announced the destruction of one German surface raider by the British cruiser Cornwall in an Indian ocean battle. The sunken Nazi ship was believed to be the former transatlantic liner Hansa.)

The area declared to be a danger zone includes the northern part of the Red sea, the gulfs of Suez and Aqaba, and goes as far south as the Tropic of Cancer, 450 miles below the Suez canal.

Territorial waters of Saudi Arabia were excluded from the area outlined.

The text of the communique: "As a result of the development of war in the eastern Mediterranean, war actions of German armed forces may also be expected in the Red sea in the future."

"Every ship which travels these waters, which have become an operations area, exposes itself to destruction by mines or other weapons of war. The German government therefore urgently warns against travel in the endangered area, which is bounded as follows:

"The northern part of the Red sea including the Gulf of Suez and the Gulf of Aqaba; (south) to the Tropic of Cancer.

"The waters of Saudi Arabia are excluded. Regulation for travel in the designated operations area by specially marked pilgrim ships has been reserved." (End text.)

Constant Traffic

(This apparently referred to ships carrying Moslem pilgrims across the Red sea to Mecca—a constant traffic in that part of the world.)

The Red sea announcement came at the close of a day in which Der Angriff, Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels' paper, published an article by Robert Ley, Nazi labor front leader, saying that "poor Daddy Roosevelt" had "missed the bus" because in three years, at the longest, that part of Europe ruled by Germany would be working at full blast for Germany.

"Then 300,000,000 Europeans of our continent, with the powerful and inexhaustible resources of their economy and work, will face 130,000,000 Americans in the United States and 40,000,000 Englishmen in ruined and defeated England," Ley wrote.

Hess Desertion Viewed by High Britons As Better Than Major Military Victory

Consider Event Reveals Discord In Nazi Councils

LONDON, May 13 (AP)—High Britons declared tonight that Rudolf Hess, by his almost incredible flight from Adolf Hitler, had given Britain more military advantage "than a major victory on the battlefield."

Authoritative sources said, moreover, that the desertion of Adolf Hitler's deputy Fuehrer was concrete evidence that Hess "and others in the inner councils of the Nazis" had decided that Germany could not beat a Britain backed by full United States aid.

Members of commons speculated here that Hess quarreled with Hitler because he already knew that Hitler had abandoned his plan for invasion of England.

"Hess would not have come to Britain if he believed Hitler had a chance to stage a successful invasion of England in the near future," reliable informants said.

"For he'd then be in the power of those who wish whom he so easily has fallen out."

In parliamentary lobbies, there were suggestions that Hess might be persuaded to broadcast to Germany.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 14 (AP)—Prime Minister Winston Churchill himself shortly will interview runaway deputy Rudolf Hess, it was disclosed early today.

The place of meeting was not disclosed.

British officials already are questioning Hess, who flew to Britain last Saturday in a commandeered Messerschmitt fighter plane, and The Daily Mail said he was describing to the British true conditions in Germany and in the Nazi hierarchy.

many and the German-occupied countries, to give them a picture of what is going on in Hitler's inside councils.

(The British short-wave radio already was spreading the news of his desertion far and wide. Today it quoted this Cairo comment: "The first rat to leave the ship.")

The house of commons, meeting in temporary quarters because of the destruction wrought to its chamber by Saturday night's Nazi raid, heard from Prime Minister Winston Churchill that he had worked on the case personally most of last night.

He deferred a detailed statement, but he remarked: "... this is one of those cases in which the imagination is somewhat baffled by the facts as they present themselves."

Officials understandably were loath to divulge what specific military advantage Britain might gain from the 800-mile flight of Hess to Scotland, although there was one report he had brought definite and vital information concerning Germany's air force.

Authorized statements stressed that Hess had no specific message, and that his desertion was dictated by purely personal motives.

But they did say that Hess had (See HESS, Page 6)

Draft Blanks Sent Students

Information Given On Possible Deferment Of 'Necessary Men'

Further information for University of Iowa students regarding the procedure with regard to filling information with draft boards for possible occupational deferment of military service was released Wednesday.

The University's committee on national defense and military service emphasized these points:

(1) The state headquarters of selective service has sent blanks and information to each University of Iowa student who is registered with a local draft board in Iowa. But if the student did not receive such blanks, the material is available on the campus at the registrar's office and from the deans of professional colleges.

(2) Outstate students can obtain the same forms at the university and should do so without waiting for action by the selective service headquarters in their respective states. This is the simplest and most effective method.

Issuance of this information follows the publication last week of a set of principles formulated by the university, after consultation with the state board, for possible military service deferment of students defined as "necessary men."

Amplification of the specialized fields in which "a growing overall national shortage of manpower" is found to exist has been received from Col. Robert J. Shaw, state advisor on occupational deferments.

These are engineering (civil, electrical, chemical, mining and metallurgical, mechanical), chemistry, medicine, and dentistry. A shortage is expected in: pharmacy, physics, biology, and bacteriology, engineering (sanitary and agricultural), veterinary science, geology (geophysics, meteorology, hydrology, and cartography).

Attempt Made To Limit Rise In Gold Price

WASHINGTON, May 13 (AP)—A bill extending President Roosevelt's emergency monetary powers for two years won approval of the house coinage committee so quickly today that an amendment designed to forestall further devaluation of the dollar slipped into the measure almost unnoticed.

Acting Chairman Cochran (D-Mo) said he would recall the members tomorrow and, in the hope that the full democratic strength would be present, would attempt to eliminate the amendment.

"Some of the boys didn't know what they were voting for," Cochran said. "We'll have the votes tomorrow to knock the amendment out. That proposition would certainly tie the president's hands."

British Repulse Axis in Egypt

CAIRO, Egypt, May 13 (AP)—Five axis columns with 200 vehicles including tanks have been hurled back to the Salum sector on the Egyptian border after penetrating 40 miles into Egypt, British general headquarters announced tonight.

The Germans and Italians were met at Sofati, 40 miles from the Libyan frontier and 20 miles from the coast.

Two columns advanced along the coastal route, while the other three approached along the escarpment further inland, the British said.

By evening they were back in the Salum region from which they had started operations, said the British, who regarded the advance as a scouting "in force" to measure British resistance in the torrid desert.

Successes also were described in the Ethiopian theater, where 200 more Italians were said to have been captured as imperial forces continued their closing-in tactics against the fortress of Amba Alaji, where 38,000 Italians are making a final stand. Fighting there was going on in steaming terrain drenched by summer rains, the British said.

At the besieged port of Tobruk in Libya, the British said "There was no change in the situation."

Grant Wilson $60,000 Libel Suit Verdict

DES MOINES, May 13 (AP)—The $60,000 civil libel suit of Lehan T. Ryan against Governor George A. Wilson came to a sudden end in district court today when Judge Frank Shankland granted the governor a direct verdict.

Ryan, a former assistant attorney general and now a Des Moines attorney, indicated that he would appeal the judge's ruling to the Iowa supreme court.

Ryan brought suit against the governor on the basis of statements in a report by two state examiner-auditors of an investigation of the state banking department ordered by the governor.

One of the examiner-auditors later apologized for an error involving Ryan in the report.

The directed verdict came at the conclusion of the presentation of Ryan's case, and before the defense had offered any testimony.

Lack of Confidence

"No malice has been proven in this case. There is no evidence of any damage sustained by the plaintiff (Ryan). There is no evidence from which spite, hatred or ill will could even be inferred. And no evidence of any intent to injure the plaintiff," Judge Shankland told the jury in directing the return of a verdict for the governor.

"It is with reluctance," the court continued, "that this court directs the verdict. But there are occasions when it is the absolute duty of the court to sustain a motion for a directed verdict. This appears to be one of those cases."

In announcing his intention to take an "immediate" appeal Ryan declared the case involves "a matter that has never been determined by the supreme court."

British Destroyers Beat Off Nazi Air Attack Near Crete

Pompons, Six-Inchers Set Up 'Wall of Shells'; Fleet Blasts Bengasi

By LARRY ALLEN

ABOARD THE BATTLESHIP WARSPITE, FLAGSHIP OF THE BRITISH MEDITERRANEAN FLEET, May 13 (AP)—Back in an Egyptian base after beating off one of the most determined torpedo and bombing attacks of the war and shelling the axis base at Bengasi, ship crews of the British Mediterranean fleet loaded new ammunition today with determination to keep the Mediterranean open at all costs.

The entire battle fleet, at anchor in the calm harbor waters, presented a peaceful picture in sharp contrast to the fiery show I saw Saturday night (May 10) during a 75-minute battle with German planes somewhere between Libya and the island of Crete.

The planes, attempting to cripple a large war convoy, swooped six times to the attack between 8:15 and 10:30 p. m., but none got near enough to launch torpedoes successfully.

The strong fleet escort saw to that by hurling up thousands of shells of various calibers, from six-inchers to the little pompons, under the bright light of the moon.

It was as dusk closed in that we became aware of the axis planes, which for two days previously had made attempts to blast the fleet.

Suddenly I saw a formation of at least 12 planes dive out of a (See BATTLE, Page 6)

Officials Plan To Train British Pilots in U.S.

WASHINGTON, May 13 (AP)—British and American officials are perfecting a plan for bringing some 2,000 young Britons to this country for preliminary training as combat fliers.

The war department and the British embassy, it was revealed today, have the project under discussion and, it was understood, are about to come to a final decision upon it.

Meanwhile, it was said at the maritime commission that the operators of American intercoastal ships had been asked to consider putting 40 of their 108 ships at the disposal of the government, thus providing some 320,000 tons of the 2,000,000 ton shipping pool which President Roosevelt recently ordered established for the service of this country and England.

As the plan for training British fliers was unfolded, the men would come to the United States as civilians—because of this country's technically neutral status. Here, they would be assigned to six schools understood to be situated in California, Florida, Texas, Oklahoma and Georgia.

Training planes—the American output of which has increased strikingly in recent months—dormitories, school facilities and instructors, would be supplied by the United States army on a lease-lend basis.

German Envoy, In Jovial Mood, Back in Ankara

ANKARA, Turkey, May 12 (Delayed AP)—German Ambassador Franz von Papen arrived in Ankara from Germany by plane tonight and was greeted at the airport by diplomatic representatives of the axis.

Besides German, Italian, Japanese, Hungarian and Bulgarian representatives, a Spanish diplomat also was on hand.

"I come as a dove of peace, bearing an olive branch," declared von Papen, in a jovial mood. "I assure you, you can all spend the summer pleasantly at the beaches."

Commenting on reports that Germany plans a campaign in the near east, possibly through Syria, one high Turkish official declared that "Turkey will never abandon her British alliance which is mutually profitable."

Lewis Seeks Agreement for CIO—Coal Mines Face Shutdown

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The possibility arose yesterday of a new shutdown in the Appalachian soft coal mines, only recently re-opened under a temporary wage agreement.

John L. Lewis, president of the CIO United Mine Workers, said in New York that unless a permanent agreement could be reached with southern operators this week it might be "considered necessary" to call miners from their jobs in all of the Appalachian pits.

Asserting he was not impressed with the progress of the wage conference, Lewis said the union had "no desire to continue this uncertainty in the industry."

The miners in the eight-state area returned to work two weeks ago after being idle during a month of negotiations. A two-year contract expired April 1, and the mines were re-opened with the understanding that work would go on pending negotiations for a new contract.

The northern operators met a union demand for a $7 a day wage scale, a $1 a day increase over the previous two years, but the southern owners held out for continuance of a wage differential of 40 cents a day. The union asked a blanket increase to $7 a day for both northern and southern mines, which would have boosted the southern scale $1.40 a day from the previous $5.60 level.

Under the temporary agreement, the southerners consented to a $1-a-day increase to $6.80, with the differential controversy to be adjusted later.

A strike at the Colt's Firearms company, Hartford, Conn., slowed up production of weapons for the army and for Great Britain. An undetermined number of employees walked out, but company officials said that the plant was in operation and that a "substantial number" of the 4,900 day employees were at work.

The issues were not announced, but it was reported that the strikers wanted wage increases of about 20 per cent from present rates of 50 cents to $1.20 an hour. The company has no union contract, but Robert Mintz, a field organizer for the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers union, said that the union was ready to negotiate immediately for a collective bargaining agreement.

Mintz said that 75 per cent of the more than 5,000 employees had joined the union and had authorized it to negotiate.

A company official said he had not seen the union's offer, but that the management would be willing to confer Wednesday with representatives of the state labor department, the federal office of production management, and the workers' committee. He did not mention the union.

Italian Naval Attache On Way to Lisbon

ABOARD THE S.S. EXCALIBUR, At Sea, May 13 (AP)—Admiral Alberto Lais, Italian naval attache recalled from Washington at the request of the United States government and removed by the British from the Spanish liner Marques De Comillas at Bermuda in April, has been placed aboard this American export liner bound for Lisbon.

It was reported he had been exchanged for a British diplomat captured in the Balkans by the Italians.

Industry and the Profit Motive

A certain well known columnist has been almost vociferous lately in his denunciation of the government's recent action of pinching prices on the one hand while secretly giving its go-ahead signal to strikers for higher wages on the other. This will surely culminate in a dangerous pincer movement on industry, he cautions; then he points out that a voluntary economic system cannot operate without profits. What this critic always seems to forget, however, is to present any sort of reasonable figures to substantiate his alarm. Apparently he is oblivious to the fact there are such figures. The Nation magazine for this week, for instance, publishes a few, showing that 176 companies accrued total profits for the first quarter of 1941 23 per cent over the corresponding period of 1940, which, incidentally, was a very profitable year besides 1939, itself a very profitable year.

Or again the example of U. S. Steel might be cited, the largest single industrial corporation in the country, still managing to operate despite its burden of increased taxation and wage raises on profits exactly doubled over the previous year's sizable profits.

Such successes meet only with esteem. Of course there is nothing wrong with the profit motive. The whole foundation of our society is based upon it. It stems directly from the perfectly human instinct to grow strong, to acquire things, and to possess. Inevitably in industry that leads to mass production.

Nevertheless in this connection there is another element that enters in: the growth of mass production can continue only so long as there is a constantly increasing purchasing power on the part of labor.

Before industry can continue with its ultimate program of turning out the best homes, the best schools, the best highways, the best groceries and all the rest, labor on its side must have enough money to buy those homes, those schools, those groceries, and the rest.

Of course, as is usually done, the management can plan a certain level of production conducive to a certain favorable range of profits and absolutely refuse to budge further on the ground such expansion might entail risk.

Labor is left to get along on a restricted wage scale, held to a certain standard of living. Business in general as a result will be poor. Very often such an attitude on the part of industrialists, if widely held, results unfortunately in huge depressions, in mass unemployment, with all their concomitant evils and threats to a stabilized society.

The picture at present, of course, is complicated by the war threat and by aid to England. The objection will be raised that whenever a nation is geared to a war economy and to armament production, such a formula for putting more purchasing power into the pockets of the man in the streets is questionable.

Now it's true that a small percentage of the nation's productive capacity has been diverted into war defense efforts. Yet, as most of the experts seem to admit, the bulk of the mills over the country as a whole have not yet been so geared, were not in 1940, were not in 1939.

Industry is still proceeding largely on the basis of business as usual. In line with tradition only, very frequently some of this takes on the form of undue grumbling over labor's proper demand for an adequate wage scale.

World's Eyes Turn to Iraq

What with trouble in Africa, at home, and in the Balkans Great Britain is now facing a critical situation in Iraq, the traditional garden of Eden.

During World War I British and Indian armies conquered this part of the Ottoman empire then known as Mesopotamia. Baghdad was occupied March 11, 1917. Under the treaty of Sevres, Turkey had to acknowledge Mesopotamia as an independent state under a "mandatory power." This mandate the League of Nations assigned to Great Britain, but in 1922 she concluded with Iraq a treaty of alliance and protection.

The treaty was renewed in 1926 and the proclaimed king, Prince Feisal son of King Hejaz, agreed to be guided in his international and financial obligations by the advice of a British High Commissioner.

In 1924 the "Mosul" question involving the frontier between Iraq and Turkey was placed before the League of Nations which in turn submitted it to the International Court of Justice. When the League awarded Iraq most of the Province of Mosul, Turkey refused to agree to this decision but finally came to terms with Britain in 1926.

During the British military occupation of Iraq, railroads were built, port facilities were developed and large reclamation projects for irrigation were put into successful use.

In 1932 Iraq received autonomy by Britain's surrender of its mandate. Nevertheless a treaty still made Iraq allied to the Empire thus giving England important air bases.

Today the question of oil which flows from "Paradise" to the Mediterranean by pipelines makes Iraq an important center in the present world crisis.

Since 1939 when King Ghazi I was killed in an automobile accident, Iraq's ruler has been his son, King Feisal II, now a tot five years old. Regent has been Feisal's Anglo-philic uncle, Premier until last February was Seyid Rashid Ali El-Gailani, ultra-nationalist. He was ousted out of office because he refused to break off relations with Italy (which Iraq was bound by treaty to do when Italy declared war on Great Britain). Now this same Gailani has returned and once more proclaimed himself premier.

To London, Cairo, and other important English war centers, come reports that El-Gailani and his small military group have been converted by nazi fifth columnists, who are bent on separating Britain from 4,000,000 tons of oil per year and the vitally important friendship of the Arab world.

Although El-Gailani's prompt reply reassures Britain that the new Iraq government will respect all treaties, especially those with the Empire, there is nevertheless high tension along the Tigris and Euphrates valleys. Now with the landing of British forces in Iraq and Turkey's expressed sympathy with England, the entire universe is wondering whether or not all the Arabs will join in this uprising. Is the ancient threat of a "Religious War" to become a reality? So far there has been no obvious reply by the Arab tribes. The whole world is waiting, watching and listening.

So it is Iraq with a population of 3,500,000 and a country twice the size of Iowa in square miles that is claiming the immediate attention of World War II.

A MAN ABOUT MANHATTAN

100,000 Fishermen Sigh As the First Mackerel Appear

NEW YORK—The first of the mackerel have shown up in local waters, and I can hear sighs from 100,000 fishermen in the metropolitan area being wafted gently and gratefully on the coastal breezes. When the mackerel are running New York isn't quite its natural self. There is something to the behavior of the "mottle backs" that excites most salt-water fishermen. As a result, captains of fishing sloops up and down the coast are ready for all comers.

The North Star, Pioneer II, Claire, Oblay, Fidus, Tambor II, Usona, Klondyke, Moccasin are manned with crew, tackle and bait. You don't have to have a rod, hook, line, sinker, or anything to enjoy fishing around here. The captain of the sloop provides all—for a small fee.

The Whitty II has just inaugurated its fishing season. If you ride the Whitty II, you will go after ood and black fish. She leaves every day and Sunday from pier 7, Sheephead Bay. A couple of bucks pay for everything, and you keep all the fish you catch.

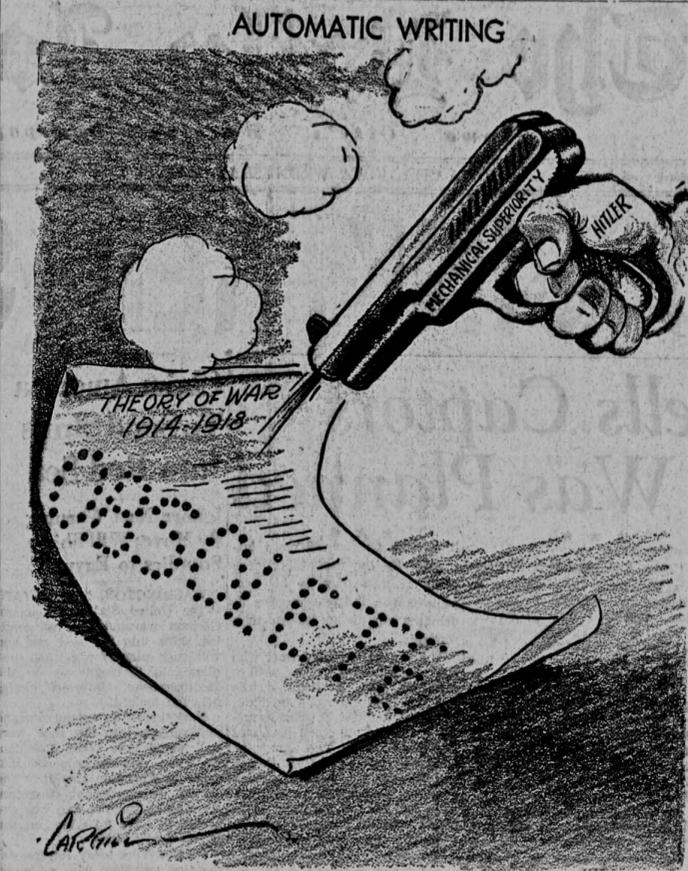

Captain Harry Berlin of the Claire, an old hand at piloting fishermen to the fishing grounds, tells me two of his guests mopped up with a catch of more than 400 flounders in a single day. They were running up to two pounds, which is nice pan size. Pollock also are appearing in satisfying numbers off the Point—the Point being Montauk point.

If you stand in West Street on the Hudson in the neighborhood of the 80's you can see traps in the river, set far out beyond the channel bed. Traps take mackerel as well as hook and line. These are large cone-shaped nets staked out from the Jersey side. They are plainly marked so as not to interfere with shipping.

Like daily baseball boxscores and flying weather reports, the condition of the water and the high tide table are so important to the public that daily reports are made by the U. S. Coast and Geodetic Survey and are published in all metropolitan newspapers. For instance, today at Sandy Hook, high tide occurred at 10:45 a.m. and 10:45 p.m. . . . At Oyster Bay it was 1:29 a.m. and 2:01 p.m. . . . At Montauk point it was 11:25 a.m. and 11:31 p.m.

Holidays and Sundays are great fishing days in this coastal region. The sloops accommodate between 50 and 200 fishermen. You cast off generally at dawn. In a couple of hours you reach the fishing grounds. . . . From then on through the day the rails are lined with fishermen, elbow to elbow. . . . There is hilarity and also a generous amount of seasickness. When the weather is rough the "casualties" sometimes run as high as 50 per cent. But it's a great pastime and a great summer coastwise industry—if you like that kind of fishing and the smell of salt water.

It is this kind of thing which has caused Mr. Knudsen to wear callouses on his forefingers, holding his nose.

Nazis Edge Forward In Bombing Raids

WASHINGTON—The increased fury of the latest German air raid on London may not mark the limit of nazi destructive ingenuity. The British have plucked information from within Germany that Goering is switching to production of four-motor long range bombers. He is doing this so he can use more airports and supplies deep within Germany for his bombing attacks.

Until recently the scope of his night fury has been restricted to the number of planes he could supply with gas and oil, mostly along the channel coast in conquered territory. That is why the Germans had to rest a few days after every all-out effort. Their two-motored ships had insufficient range to be based on central German fields, where fuel and supplies can be made available in larger quantities.

Up to now the British have assumed they could make the Germans see the futility of this kind of murderous civilian warfare as soon as they were able to do just as much to Berlin as the nazis have done to London. Now this new bad news brings up a puzzling question of the possible limits of British airports as measured against those Goering may ultimately put to work on the continent.

KNUDSEN HOLDS HIS NOSE

The OPM has a large contract for anti-aircraft guns under negotiation with a large manufacturing concern (name withheld because no signatures have been obtained yet.) When the company representatives came to Washington to negotiate, OPM insisted that "a large part" of the work be subcontracted to smaller concerns. The company representatives agreed. They went back to their plant and OPM Manager Knudsen sent out some experts to help them locate subcontractors. The company then said it had decided not to subcontract, but to fill the whole order in its plant in another city.

Mr. Knudsen's men investigated and discovered the plant in the other city was just a warehouse, empty, unequipped. The company has now come along with a request for 137 machine tools to equip the warehouse, and three fourths of these are standard machine tools which can be used generally for all kinds of boring.

As anti-aircraft guns rate higher than airplanes in priority necessities, this company could theoretically take away machine tools from the aviation industry, merely because it does not want to subcontract.

It is this kind of thing which has caused Mr. Knudsen to wear callouses on his forefingers, holding his nose.

There are other defense exper-

HATS OFF TO THESE MEN!

Better yet was the aggressiveness shown by another gun factory working on parts for a new type of naval anti-aircraft gun which is supposed to be a whiz-bang. This company promised delivery in 200 days, the quickest delivery suggested by any of the bidders.

When a government tool engineer dropped in to see the manufacturer and give him the cylinder and breech housing for production, the boss replied: "I believe we have some discarded machinery in the basement which would enable us to produce this job within 90 or 100 days." With some announced misgivings, the government engineer agreed to bank on the manufacturer's judgment.

Hollywood's Life In the Outdoors

HOLLYWOOD—Our bucolic day, or life in the great outdoors: Paramount had "Hold Back the Dawn" on location at its ranch in Malibu Canyon near Calabasas, some 30 miles from Hollywood. You drive through the valley, out Ventura boulevard, and the hills are green after this winter's unusually heavy mists, the bouidies are twittering, the flowers flowering and the "Good Earth" signs of Bob Whitworth, the real estate lyricist, are never more compelling. (L.E. "Get your piece of the Good Earth—See Bob.")

Whistle Stop

"Whistle Stop" by Marjita M. Wolff (Random: $2.50). There is something almost terrifying about Marjita M. Wolff's "Whistle Stop," in spite of its great good humor, its raucousness, and its drive. Miss Wolff ought not to write so well at such a tender age—or at least what seems a tender age, since the book was done while she was a senior at the University of Michigan and won for her the Avery Hopwood award. "Whistle Stop" is by far the best of the Hopwood books I have seen. It is the best realistic novel I have read so far this spring, and what is better, there is no indication that its author is a one-book woman. I might add to the list of wonders the most important fact that she also has a grand sense of humor—that commodity better than gold which the writer with whom she will inevitably be compared wholly. To wit, Mrs. Carson McCullers.

Whistle Stop

"Whistle Stop" is the story of one summer in the life of the Veeches, who live across the street from the railroad tracks in a little Michigan village. It begins easily, better, as summer begins in real life. It stops suddenly, as summer stops. Between a man yet unfutle life runs strong—the effect is a little like that of a great underground river which comes to the surface for a brief period, and returns to the unknown.

Whistle Stop

Molly Veech is the mother, a careless yet undefeatable slab. Sam Veech is her husband—infectious, hopeless and gently sweet. Mr. Higgins is a dependent, old, a periodic drunk, toward the end quite crazy. Molly has six children, Ernie, extra-gang forearm who takes kick-backs from his parents. Ken, no-good but handsome boy who never works but always bets, as summer begins in real life. Betty, as summer begins in real life. It stops suddenly, as summer stops. Between a man yet unfutle life runs strong—the effect is a little like that of a great underground river which comes to the surface for a brief period, and returns to the unknown.

Whistle Stop

The scene has Boyer and De Havilland witnessing the ceremony of the olive tree. There's no such ceremony, actually, but it makes a good dramatic device. After a wedding, the bridegroom shakes the tree outside the church, and the couple's progeny is supposed to equal in number the olives that fall. Boyer shakes, and the ensuing close-up reveals three olives for De Havilland to blush over. Hundreds of rubber "olives" have been tied to the tree in advance for easy dislodging.

Whistle Stop

At the Mexican luncheon, the paisanos surprise with an impromptu serenade. If they sing as if they love to sing, as if they're not listening to it, they're none to listen. The director, Mitchell Leisen, lives up to his unofficial title as the "extra's favorite director." He has a knack for seeming to play host to the people who work for him.
