How Does Spain Stand?

Spain, at the finish of this war, will present one of the allies' thorniest problems unless something is done to clear up the situation today. It will be difficult to know how to treat her not so much because of Franco, in jumping from one side of the fence to the other has confused us, but rather because South America and Latin American countries, with the possible exception of Mexico, still consider Spain their mother country and look to her for cultural and political support.

If Franco, in keeping with the policy of other neutral countries today, would make it clear that he is taking no sides, and then would continue on this straight and narrow path all would be well. However, he persists in doing just the opposite. While trying to maintain diplomatic relations with England and the United States, he at the same time preaches the anti-communist, pro-Nazi theories of Adolf Hitler. If this is an attempt to carry the knife beneath the veil, and it would certainly seem to be, then something should be done soon to make the little Spanish dictator realize he is sitting on a keg of powder and that the fuse is burning short.

The events in north Africa during the past few months have emphasized the danger of letting "two-faced" individuals or political regimes continue on their merry way unhampered by outside pressure. Darlan, who for years during the German occupation of France had been a pro-Nazi henchman of Pierre Laval, immediately changed face upon his capture in Africa and said his sympathies really were with the allies all the time and that he was forced to take the stand he did in Vichy because of Nazi pressure on him. As a result we played ball with him to make things somewhat easier during the initial stages of the invasion.

But in Franco's case the whole thing goes much deeper because repercussions of his every move can be felt much nearer home—in South America where we have been particularly anxious to spread our own doctrines; doctrines which are in direct opposition to the pro-Nazi utterances of Franco.

Although the Spanish leader has stated that he will oppose with military force any invasion from either side, and although he threw the most violent pro-Nazi agitator, Serrano Suner, from office last year, it is obvious Franco is being friendlier with the Germans because they assisted him in setting up his regime, and because the regime itself is a copy of axis political machines. In this respect it is certainly understandable why he should cater to the axis overlords; but it in no way justifies our attitude of letting him remain at bay while he sings Hitler's song. If we ever intend to unite the Americas politically, economically and even culturally, it must be pointed out to the South Americans that Franco is either definitely with us or definitely against us.

It would not be a simple matter to do this, but the gains accomplished by such a move would, we believe, be worthwhile. For if it could be shown to the South Americans that Franco was destroying old Spanish culture in an effort to keep up with the axis; that he was in reality an enemy rather than a friend of those democracies, then we would stand a much better chance of getting South America to look to the United States for cultural and political guidance rather than to Spain.

If the situation were cleared up today, or as soon as we could do so without having to worry over the military results of such a move—a German invasion of Spain—it would make it much easier for the allies at the peace table after the war. We would at least not have to ask the question: "How does Spain stand?"

The Great Quest

The quest for coffee, or for something that tastes like coffee, or has a "kick" like the real extract of the coffee-berry may soon be as ardent as the search in prohibition days for an alcoholic liquor fit to drink. But it will probably be safer and saner. Anyway, it is an interesting field of research.

There are, to begin with, such good old-fashioned beverages as catnip and boneseed and camomile and peppermint tea and various other substitutes mostly with a medicinal background but drinkable in a crisis.

And when a fellow once gets started on a quest like this, it is surprising what interesting facts he can pick up. The once common coffee berry seems related to the

News Behind the News

The Real Question Involved In Agricultural Scrap

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON—A subdivision of the farm bloc known as "the house agricultural appropriations sub-committee" has turned down the Wickard $100,000,000 subsidy program—the idea of dipping into the treasury for this amount now and more later to pay farmers more than their vegetables can bring in the ceilinging market, and then selling the vegetables to the consumers at a government loss.

The true significance of the action was belatedly by a loud rhetorical controversy as to whether a subsidy is a subsidy or a "bonus" or merely an "incentive payment," and there has been some cheering around the country on the theory that the congress has again repelled radicalism. The cheering may have been somewhat premature.

The real question involved in the scrap was how high farm prices should go, the farm bloc apparently believed Wickard's program would not go high enough. They expect to get theirs later, in another way.

When all this quibbling and farm prospects are sifted, it is clear that before Mr. Roosevelt will be able to free the world of fear, he is going to have to free the farmer from fear of prices, and fear of want of help, equipment, repair parts and gasoline.

Both Mr. Wickard and congress are putting around on these four fears of the farmer, but as usual, with the accent heavily on prices.

That they may have the accent in the wrong place is becoming daily more obvious in the accumulating evidence. Typical of all plain farmer's mail is a public letter from dirt farmer Louis Bromfield, the author, who points out that inestimable thousands of acres of soybeans, corn, apples and even other products, lie rotting in the fields today from last year's crop—not because of price, but because of lack of help, which will be accentuated further this year by depreciation of farm machinery and lack of gasoline. Mr. Bromfield says he found many a good farmer facing his uncertainties today with this thought:

"I and my family are all right. We will eat. When the city people have not enough to eat, maybe Washington will do something about the situation."

The advertising which the situation makes it certain Washington will do something before that, but the question still is whether it will be the right thing, or whether it will just be another price increase or subsidy payment.

No matter how high the evidence from the farmer grows, the farm politicians, like others here, cannot seem to get away from the notion that to cure any deficiencies out in the country, all they have to do is to push a price button up or down.

Yet it is plain that if the farm bloc boosts lettuce to a dollar a leaf, it will not increase the lettuce crop unless the farmer gets help, equipment and gasoline—and in case he does get these things we can produce his food without an inordinately high, inflationary price.

One ray of hope is the slight weakening of the army in its stand against releasing any men for the farm front. It may release battalions but not individuals, to do farm work. Yet in England, the same U. S. army is allowing its jeeps to participate in plowing the fields for spring planting.

Already the radicals (even the CIO) are seeing their chance in this situation. They are publicly promoting a more or less communal farm program, which would create state or county quasi-soviets to pool help, machinery and gas. Everyone knows most of the nation's farmers already do this in a neighborhood and democratic manner, and this democratic way can be expanded without creating a communal organization in the Red way.

Unless someone gives the farmers some certainty as to the future, the battle on the farm front will be lost this spring in planting.

Tribute to U. S. Policy of 'Playing Ball'
Heralded arrival of the Richelieu and other French warships at American ports was a convincing tribute to the administration's policy of expediency in playing ball with Darlan in Tunisia. Just a day or so before Darlan was shot, he made the French governor of Dakar come through with the agreement releasing these ships to us. They will go into active combat service on our side.

But there are more French warships in the harbor of Alexandria, which the French commander there has been keeping beyond reach of British fingers. He has threatened to scuttle them at the first British move.

The British are getting a little annoyed at this situation, and developments toward getting better cooperation out of that Vichy commander may be expected.

tea leaf, as far as its stimulating principle is concerned, a fact which explains why coffee and tea serve about the same purpose.

There seem to be no satisfactory substitutes for coffee excepting tea, and chocolate, "food of the gods." And all of these three are getting scarcer and scarcer as the war goes on. But with a vivid imagination and a strong stomach, anybody can find something. Particularly in the form of tea of one kind or another. The dictionary gives scores of things which at least go by the name of tea, from Abyssinian Tea down to Wood Tea, a tempting concoction made of galium wood, saffras, onion root and licorice root.

Interpreting The War News

Eisenhower to Meet Tunisian Onslaught From North, South

By KIRKE L. SIMPSON

General Eisenhower has suffered a serious but far from crippling defeat in Tunisia. There is every indication that he will meet the situation with offensive moves on his flanks.

A futile allied effort to split the foe apart to the coast has been indefinitely frustrated. The axis escape corridor for a concentration in northern Tunisia is wide open. American forces in the center are no longer an immediate flanking menace. Even air attack on the corridor must diminish due to evacuation of advance flying fields.

Advantage Spots
There are mitigating circumstances, however, of which Eisenhower seems set to take quick advantage. Britain's Eighth army is already on the march in southern Tunisia. Advance elements now are fronting the Mareth line. Desert patrols at Fom Tatahoumine are already menacing it from flank and rear as well.

A test of Nazi purpose or ability to hold that line is in the making. It still looks as though a Nazi retreat, not a stand, is to be expected and that the blitzkrieg which crashed through the American flanking outpost line in the center was designed to cover that final withdrawal northward.

No Sufficient Force
In any event, Eisenhower apparently was not relying on the collapsed flanking front heavily in his battle plans. Orders which brought the British in the south into contact with the Mareth line has been issued before the Nazi blow was struck. Events prove there was no sufficient American striking power yet mustered in the center for a power drive to the coast.

Obviously Eisenhower hoped to build up that striking power if a German stand on the Mareth line developed. A test of that is coming from the British advance in the south under his orders without delay which indicates the center position was regarded by his staff and himself as of secondary value even before it was overrun.

On the old military axiom that attack is always the best defense, Eisenhower must be more concerned now with expediting major assaults on his foe in the north and the south than with preparing a new flanking threat in the center.

Unless Rommel's remnants do stand on the Mareth line for the first real fight with pursuing British forces since El Alamein, the Faid pass - Maknassy flanking routes now have little tactical or strategic meaning.

If a prolonged battle develops in the south, they would come sharply back into the battle picture. Withdrawal of axis heavy tanks on that front to meet British surges in the south is to be expected in that case. That could give a reorganized, reinforced and reequipped Franco-American force (See INTERPRETING, page 5)

Urge Students To Enroll For Russian Class

Men and women interested in entering the third section of the intensive Russian language course should make application immediately for entering the elementary or advanced course, Prof. Jack A. Posin, instructor of Russian, announced yesterday.

Each enrollment is restricted to 15 students, and the course continues for 13 weeks. Two years of college work is required for the elementary course, and to be admitted to the advanced course the student must have had two years of Russian or have completed the university's elementary course.

The first elementary course was completed in December and the second, together with an advanced group, will end April 3.

Tuition fee for either course is $200, but a limited number of scholarships for highly qualified students will be available, Professor Posin said.

The army, navy, and civilian agencies of the government have a great need for personnel trained in Russian, and the Iowa course is one of five in American schools qualified to supply that demand.

Letters of application should contain information concerning date and place of birth, citizenship, college training, linguistic experience, occupation, selective service status, a transcript of college record and three references.

Monroe Smith Tells Of Hostel Movement

AYH Founder Shows Colored Film Typical Of Hostellers' Trips

Monroe Smith, co-director and founder of the American Youth Hostels, addressed an interested group of Iowa Citizens last night in Macbride auditorium on what hosting is, what you need to become a hosteller, and what the AYH is doing in the war effort. He concluded his program by presenting colored motion pictures of hostellers both in the United States and South America.

Membership in AYH has grown steadily from its birth in 1935 to the present with from 75,000 to 76,000 passes being issued just last year. To become a member of the AYH, which has recorded some six-million miles covered by hostellers, all you need is an AYH pass, a handbook, and a sleeping sack.

This year the AYH is emphasizing some new features due to the fact that there is a greater need for hosting than ever before. Stating that, "Schools and youth hosting should go hand and hand," Smith related the present interest of farmers in hosting groups. He suggested that vacant school houses be used as hostel centers during the summer months where hostellers can go for relaxation and amusement after a day spent in the fields and on the farms helping out in the present farm labor shortage.

Hostelling will be more popular than ever this year because of the lack of tires and gasoline which used to transport persons from one place to another. It also provides diversion and needed outdoor exercise for defense workers. The average hosteller travels about 30 miles a day and to illustrate this, Smith showed a series of colored motion picture films depicting a typical day in the life of a youth hosteller. Particularly interesting were the pictures of the trip Smith and 17 hostellers took through South America from the Andes to the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again.

that British army has been preparing for major action. Forecasts on Tunisian weather in the north have agreed that it might provide good tank going and advance airfields with hardened surfaces any time after mid-February. The fact that the ground in the center of the 300-mile line supported Nazi 60-ton monster tanks that rolled over American lines indicates that the weather factor is no longer the big hampering factor in the north that it has been. By every rule of military logic Eisenhower's answer to axis successes in the center would be simultaneous allied assaults in the north and south. His main striking power is mobilized on his flanks.

Byron Coglan To Be Head Of Rural Drive

Mrs. M. E. Taylor Names Small Town Campaign Chairmen

Names of the rural and small town chairmen and the quotas for each township and small town in the Johnson county Red Cross war fund drive, now getting under way in the rural areas were announced yesterday by Mrs. M. E. Taylor, general chairman.

Byron Coglan, Iowa City, will head the rural area drive, it was announced. A quota of $10,000 has been set for these districts. Clark F. Mighell, also of Iowa City, is in charge of the campaign in the small towns of the county, for which a quota of $2,000 has been set.

The county quota is $26,000, and the quota for the Iowa City campaign, which will start March 1, is $14,600.

"Although these quotas seem high," Mrs. Taylor said, "there is much more need for the Red Cross money this year. These amounts represent estimates of what is needed now for Red Cross work, but perhaps if the severity of the war increases, they will have to be increased."

A dinner for all Red Cross workers in the county will be held tonight in the Hotel Jefferson at 6:30 to make plans for the war fund drive. Supplies for both rural and small town chairmen will be given out at this time. Reservations should be made by calling the Hotel Jefferson, 4121.

Roger Holden, head of the national Red Cross speaker's bureau and former president of the Chicago Red Cross chapter, will be the guest speaker on the after dinner program, which is in charge of Prof. Earl E. Harper. Lieut. Robert M. Schwyhart, chaplain of the Iowa Navy Pre-Flight school, will speak on "The Red Cross As I Have Seen It Work," and the pre-flight school band will play.

CAMP SUTTON, N. C.—Corporal Stanley Robillard, a 46-year-old volunteer New Hampshire man in his second World war, is something new to the boys stationed at nearby Camp Sutton. Robillard, of Derry, N. H., now a grandfather, has a chestful of medals won in the last war, among them a Purple Heart and Victory medal. But he refuses to wear 'em.

Every officer is required to salute those medals when they appear on Stanley's chest, and he says he has too much saluting to do anyhow. So he keeps the half-dozen of them in his duffle bag.

WAVE OFFICER ADDRESSES U. W. A.

Ens. Violetta G. Mahoney describes WAVES.

WAVE Officer Tells University Women Of Need for Recruits in Navy Shore Jobs

"We are part of the navy, not just an auxiliary," was the statement of Ens. Violetta G. Maloney, in her lecture on the women's branch of the navy yesterday in the senate chamber of Old Capitol.

In yesterday's talk before a large group of university women, Ensign Maloney outlined the needs of the navy for women on shore duty and briefly discussed WAVE training and jobs.

"Each of the women knows an active WAVE is responsible for the life of a man every time she does her job," said Ensign Maloney when she explained that the main purpose of the WAVES is to release men for active sea duty.

According to her women having office experience are needed most at present. Jobs to be filled by WAVES include accounting, bookkeeping, radio operators, aviation ground work, parachute material work, aviation metallurgy, medical technicians and photographers, (including various phases of public relations work).

After being sworn in and ordered to active duty as an enlisted WAVE, the enlistee is sent to a training school for a four weeks' indoctrination course. These training schools are located at colleges in, every part of the nation. The school to which the WAVE is sent will depend upon the type of job for which she is being trained.

Following indoctrination, some enlistees will be assigned to active duty, while others will receive special training, varying in length. The training period averages four months in most cases.

The state AAA has ordered all sales of commodity credit corporation feed wheat halted, Ray E. Smalley, county chairman, announced yesterday.

Loan wheat for feed can no longer be redeemed except in "emergency situations," which as yet exist nowhere in the state, according to the Iowa AAA committee. Feed wheat located at present in bins in the Johnson county AAA may still be sold to meet local demands.

SAYS ACE TEST PILOT "RED" HULSE

The "T-ZONE"—Taste and Throat—is the proving ground for cigarettes. Only your taste and throat can decide which cigarette tastes best to you...and how it affects your throat. For your taste and throat are absolutely individual to you.

Based on the experience of millions of smokers, we believe Camels will suit your "T-ZONE" to a "T." Prove it for yourself!
