By RICK TIMMS

Most people aren’t familiar with the rules and regulations of the ‘chain rule’ in the law.

A point of property trespassing at the corner of Washington and Dunlop streets by a few non-registered pedestrians prompted a police investigation and possible ticketing.

Towards the corner there were seven people, including one man who seemed to be drunk and another who was carrying a large bag.

This would indicate that the bylaw enforcement officers did their due diligence and designated the area as a pedestrian crossing.

But it is under this rule that the man was stopped and issued a $200 ticket for trespassing.

This is the first time this has ever happened in the city’s history.

BRITISH DILEMMA IN MIDDLE EAST

British, the "bulwark of the Free World," are being outflanked by the increasing security situation in the Middle East, bringing implications for the United States. The British themselves recognize that the situation is critical and that the United States must become more involved in order to prevent a power vacuum in the area.

In the past, Britain has relied on its traditional alliances and the strength of the British Empire to maintain its influence in the region. However, as the power of Arab nationalist movements grows, the British are finding it difficult to maintain control.

The situation in the Middle East is complex and involves a variety of factors. The Arab states are united in their opposition to British rule in Palestine and Cyprus, and they are increasingly united in their desire for self-determination and independence. The British are also facing increasing pressure from the United States, which is seeking to establish its own influence in the region.

The United States has a strategic interest in the Middle East, as it is a vital area for the transportation of oil and other resources. The United States also seeks to maintain stability in the region, as it is concerned about the potential for instability to spread to other parts of the world.

In response to the growing threat, the British have increased their military presence in the region. They have also sought to strengthen their relationships with the United States and other Western countries in order to maintain their influence.

The situation in the Middle East is likely to remain volatile, and the United States and the British will need to work together to find a solution that meets the interests of all parties involved.

136 Jobs for 70 Engineers Point out Labor Shortage

By ROGER NEUMAYER

Putting up the labor shortage that exists in specialized fields for engineers is the last of 136 different employers asked for their view for the second year of the 15 vacancy engineering graduating students.

The number of jobs actually available for engineers is not known, but the average industrial concerns, governmental and municipal departmen, university and research institutions wanted them in excess of 136. In two or more branches of engineering, the engineers were asked.

Specialists were not as pressed down, with 33 em- ployers interested in getting them. 33 concerns wanted electrical engineers. They were interested in getting civil engineers. 33 wanted industrial engineering students. 33 wanted mechanical engineers, and 3 employers were interested in getting chemical engineering graduates.

Some statistics were released by the college of engineering placement bureau. The bureau stated that 66 per cent of the graduate engineers were placed, where 88 per cent of the students were placed.

Committee to Hear Expert on Rodents

The Bureau of Chemistry and the Bureau of Economics at the University of Iowa, consisting of outstanding engineers, will work on a study of fungi, for goods and merchandise they received a BA degree with honors in economics, in which they made 234 round trips for the University in February, 1944. That made 234 round trips for the University in February, 1944. That 350 miles for each semi of lack of space or are deliberating desired interviews. The other 43 interviews between company representatives and students who want to be interviewed. The bureau is only open to these people is unknown, but the average industrial concern will accept.
