'I Didn't Think'

One of the most tragic news stories of the year is less than a month away.

Sometime in December, probably during the Christmas holiday season, some one will become the millionth traffic fatality in America.

Unfortunately, no one can prevent it—but we can prolong it. The Daily Iowan is launching a campaign for traffic safety. Articles which will appear during the coming month will include driving hints, interesting facts and news items about drivers—some of them humorous, some of them tragic, you'll want to read them all. With your help we can prolong that millionth traffic fatality. Don't you be Mr. Million!

Teen-Age Drivers

Iowa's teen-agers, as well as those from other states, may find themselves back in the horse and buggy days if their driving record doesn't improve.

Each new accident involving teen-agers is being chinked up and given play in the newspapers. Soon people are going to wake up and say, "We've got to do something about this."

When that day comes, hundreds of careful and responsible teen-agers in Iowa alone will lose their driving privilege because of a minority group—a minority group that willfully violates the traffic rules and causes numerous fatal accidents.

The latest report on the fatality record in Iowa reveals that drivers in the younger age group have been involved in 73 accidents during the first nine months of this year. Teen-agers were involved in 81 fatal accidents in 1950 and in 58 in 1949 in the first nine months periods of those years.

The latest teen-ager accident to make headlines was not in Iowa. However, the Pontiac, Michigan, accident, which made eleven children orphans and claimed the lives of four of the five beer-drinking teen-agers responsible for the accidents, seems sure to focus the problem of teen-ager drivers in the news spotlight again.

In view of the nation's growing traffic fatality rate, no penalty seems too great to bring against reckless and inconsiderate drivers.

Teen-agers should take warning from these incidents. The ire of a shocked nation will not accept callowness and irresponsibility as excuses much longer.

Don't Be Mr. Million

What does a man think in those unbelievable seconds before his car hits the child running in the street, the woman who clutches her bundles and turns bewildered back to the curb, the man who throws up his arm in a futile attempt to protect himself.

Maybe it's all summed up in that phrase of regret so many drivers have had to speak: "I didn't think!"

Winter is closing in now, obscuring vision with its darkness, lengthening stopping distance with its wet and icy streets. It's time to think.

Think now to have your car inspected for safe mechanical condition. Think now to change to winter driving habits. Slow down when vision is obscured. Watch for the hurried pedestrian.

Think now, "I didn't think" is too late.

This is a public safety service of your safety-minded businesses and this newspaper in cooperation with the Iowa Safety Congress.

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

MARK TWAIN, says Vincent Starrett, once visited the celebrated Madame Tussaud's wax works in London, and was admiring a replica of Queen Victoria when he felt a sudden stab of pain in his posterior. Wheeling angrily, he found himself face to face with a flabbergasted British matron, her umbrella still pointed at him. "O lor, it's alive!" she gasped, and fled into the night.

A highly publicized—also highly overrated—British film producer, panicked by thoughts of atomic warfare, ordered air-raid shelters constructed immediately in every corner of his studio. One London critic commented wryly: "Sir So-and-so seems unduly concerned to us. He overlooks the fact that his studio hasn't had a hit in ten years."

Interpreting the News —

Dulles Advocates Ultimatum to Halt Aggression

By J. M. ROBERTS JR., Associated Press News Analyst

The suggestion has been made from time to time over a period of several years that the United States should draw a clean demarcation line between East and West and tell Russia just what it would mean if she oversteps it.

The state department, however, has shied away from anything resembling an ultimatum. While they have not said so in so many words, the feeling has been that the United States political position has advanced faster than its military position, and that an ultimatum without the backing of sufficient power could be dangerous.

The effort, therefore, has been to meet Soviet expansionism at its most immediate points of manifestation but not to lay down hard and fast policies about what will be done in future situations.

The ultimatum idea, which he might call an oversimplified description, has now been advanced, however, by John Foster Dulles, who is no fire eater.

Dulles is one of the greatest proponents of the idea that the nation will score no real success which is not based on a strongly moral position. It's not so much that he attempts to put aside the stark realities of a hard world, but that he faces them and says "we'll still try to do what is right."

He recommends that, if Russia rejects the three-power disarmament proposals now before the United Nations, she should be warned of immediate attack on her home bases if she resorts to military aggression.

Dulles does not draw the comparison, but this would eliminate the possibility of further misunderstanding such as that which invited Communist aggression when the United States indicated she did not consider Korea one of her responsibilities.

Dulles speaks of the formation of an overwhelming striking force by the free nations to back the warning he proposes. This suggests that he may not propose an immediate ultimatum, but that he considers the Allies near enough to the "position of strength" which Acheson has been seeking so that they can begin to consider their military course in a new light.

Dulles is a special advisor to and negotiator for the state department with ambassadorial rank. He is a Republican, and does not pretend to speak for the administration. But neither is he out of step with it. He just thinks that the Allies must move faster and more directly than he considers possible through collective security measures in the United Nations itself.

BERLIN KREMLIN

WORK — HARD WORK — is the lot of Russian women and children. These hapless folk were working digging entrenchments before the city of Leningrad, to which the German Wehrmacht laid siege.

(EDITOR'S NOTE—This is one of a series of 12 articles, telling starkly and bluntly the truth of life for a Russian soldier in the Soviet-controlled zone of Germany, as told by Maj. Gregory Klimov, a former member of the Russian general staff in Germany. Disgusted with the system under which he lived, Major Klimov fled to the western (Allied occupied) zone of Germany. Here is his own story, told for the first time.)

By MAJOR GREGORY KLIMOV Formerly of the Russian General Staff in Germany

BERLIN—"I am sitting here by the light of a petroleum lamp, just as in 1920. . . ."

A letter from my grandmother in Gorki lay before me, scrawled in almost childlike letters on a yellowed piece of paper most likely torn from one of my old school books. With difficulty I deciphered the words that she had drawn so painstakingly with her rusted pen. "The electric light only burns a couple of hours, and that not every day. I have pushed a table near the stove and it is at least a little warm. There is a terrible draft through the windows although I have stuffed all the windows with cotton. . . ."

No Heat
No electric power, no coal for the oven. This a couple of years after the victorious end of the war; this in the heart of the Donetz basin with the richest coal deposits in all Europe.

I am not surprised, however. Before the war at the academy we were forced to sit in our classes during the entire winter in heavy coats and fur caps. Our fingers froze.

The central heating for the institute was designed for native Donetz anthracite, but was stoked instead with refuse from the garbage dump.

I remember how one of my companions enjoyed a sudden fame when he invented a weird type of electric flying suit, similar to the one worn over the Polar regions. He put it together with some materials he had obtained in the school laboratory. For several days pride would turn off the switch complaining that it was too warm for him, while we were sitting there shivering.

Glory Ended
His glory was abruptly ended, however, when the NKVD (secret police) gave him the choice of scrapping the electric suit, or facing a trial on charges of having conducted an "anti-Soviet demonstration."

That is the way it is in Russia: All the students had frozen and kept quiet. One of them, however, succeeded in creating a little warmth for himself and was immediately accused of "counter-revolutionary agitation and sabotage of the Socialist economy."

Where they disappeared was of no interest. We all knew: The stork brought them and a "black raven" (the prison wagons of the NKVD) took them away.

"Yesterday mother bought two ears of corn at the market," the letter went on. "I ground it in flour and we ate corn porridge two days. . . ."

"If we only had some butter, wouldn't be so bad. However, cold and the farmers don't bring much to the market. Potatoes expensive; meal, milk and butter are simply unthinkable. . . ."

The letter continued: "Your mother goes to work every morning at seven o'clock. She comes back in the evening dog-tired. It's not so much the work that makes us so rundown as the unending tension. The people are all so embittered. . . ."

"At work your mother wears the shoes which you sent her. I also made her a pair of slippers from old rags. It's too bad we don't have any more so that we could make something else. . . ."

Steal Packages
"Recently at the factory your mother wore the stockings you sent her. They caused so much wonder among the young girls there that it was really embarrassing. . . ."

"Your mother is afraid to go to the post office to pick up packages which you send. Sometimes robbers note who received parcels from Germany and then they break in at night and steal them. Often the apprentices are hanging around the post offices and snatch the packages away in broad daylight. . . ."

I remembered the "apprentices" at the Molotov auto factory in Gorki. As the Soviet industry began to feel a shortage of manpower replacements—the youth had no inclination to volunteer for the factories—the government, shortly before the war, issued an order for the mobilization of millions of adolescents between 14 and 17 for the trade and industry schools. These were the backbone of a new class of Soviet slaves.

At the factory where they received special rations. Their meals were bad enough, but still better than those of the regular workers. In addition some of them received a little food from relatives in the country.

Often they did not eat all they received at the factory and let it stand on the tables. When the older workers came in later, they fought to get the remainders that the youths had left.

Next to the canteen was a special restaurant for the factory directors. Nobody, however, was particularly envious of them. They were replaced so often that the workers often had no time to notice their names.

Where they disappeared was of no interest. We all knew: The stork brought them and a "black raven" (the prison wagons of the NKVD) took them away.

"Yesterday mother bought two ears of corn at the market," the letter went on. "I ground it in flour and we ate corn porridge two days. . . ."

"If we only had some butter, wouldn't be so bad. However, cold and the farmers don't bring much to the market. Potatoes expensive; meal, milk and butter are simply unthinkable. . . ."

The only time I can remember that Russia had any respite from hunger was during the war when American "Lend and Lease" supplies were available.

Lived on U. S. Food
When the Russian people hear "Lend and Lease" they visualize mountains and mountains of canned goods. Russia is recognized as having one of the richest natural economies of the world. And yet from 1942 to 1945 the country lived exclusively on American food.

We officers were convinced, tactically enough, that although we could have perhaps held out without American planes and tanks, we would have starved without American rations.

Meat products, fat and sugar were 80 per cent of American origin in the Red army and just about the same was true at home. Even beans and wheat flour came from America. It seemed the only thing that was Russian was black bread; if one didn't count water.

After the end of the war, it was said in Moscow that the Kremlin had laid in enough American food itself to see it through a number of five year plans.

At the beginning of 1943 all stores in the larger towns were literally crammed with sacks of American coffee beans. Before the war coffee was regarded in Russia as a luxury item. Then suddenly, by the grace of the Americans it was overflowing the shop counters and could be obtained without ration points for 50 rubles a kilogram. Bread at that time cost 150 rubles.

Many bought the coffee by the sack, but not to drink it. They cooked the beans, dried them and ground them into flour from which they baked bread. Bread from coffee—no stranger than the common trick of making bread from mustard powder.

Infuriated by the propagandistic effect of the American largess, the NKVD rumor mongers spread the lie that the Americans had canned the flesh of South American monkeys and shipped it to Russia.

Grandmother's letter closed with a request for a cup: "I broke into a short time ago and don't know how I shall drink my tea. If you can send me one I shall be eternally grateful."

NEXT—Germany a revelation to Red soldiers.

Imagination Needed — Meal Cooked on Hot Plate

— For Dorm Weekends

With a little imagination and some culinary skill, any campus cook can turn out a nourishing and attractive meal with the use of one hot plate and a minimum of utensils.

Since the advent of the five day boarding week at two university dormitories, peanut butter and crackers have become many students' standby for weekend meals.

The following recipes are designed for students who have become tired of opening cracker boxes and peanut butter jars and long for something that resembles home cooking.

For Sunday supper have a macaroni-hamburger casserole.
7 ounce box of macaroni
1/2 to 1 pound hamburger
1 10 ounce can tomato soup
1 can of water
salt and pepper

Boil the macaroni in salt water for seven minutes and then drain. Season hamburger, brown and then add soup and water. When cooked add macaroni and serve hot. If desired chili powder or barbecue sauce may be added. This serves six to eight persons.

For dessert try chocolate dessert.

6 ounces sweet chocolate
4 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons water
1/2 teaspoon vanilla
5 egg yolks
1 egg whites (beaten stiff)
1 pound vanilla wafers

Cook chocolate, sugar, water and vanilla in an aluminum pan until chocolate is melted. Then add egg yolks one at a time and cook for another two minutes. Remove from heat and fold in egg whites. Cover the bottom of a pan with wafers and pour part of the chocolate mixture over cookies. Alternate layers of wafers and mixture until both are used up. Cool. Serve with whipped cream if desired.

Along with the casserole and chocolate dessert serve a lettuce salad with French dressing and milk.

Other main dish suggestions are California hamburgers and creamed dried beef.

To make California hamburgers brown the hamburger in a skillet. Season with salt and pepper and, if desired, chili powder or barbecue sauce may be added. Then pour tomato juice or soup over the hamburger and cook until the juice has simmered down.

For creamed dried beef make a white sauce of one cup of milk, one tablespoon butter and one tablespoon flour. Cook until thick and add dried beef.

Law School to Allow Mid-Year Registration

Students wishing to begin their professional studies at SUI's college of law will now be able to start their legal training in February, 1952, Dean Mason Ladd has announced.

Originally law courses are offered in a sequence which requires entrance into the college of law in September only, Dean Ladd noted.

Adjustment of the law schedule to permit mid-year registration in beginning law courses will provide opportunity for men in the reserves and those eligible for the draft to complete as much of their professional education as is possible before entering active service, Ladd explained.

Provision of the new starting date for instruction in law will not shorten the length of time required to complete requirements for a law degree.

Meet Bucky O'Connor

Bucky O'Connor stooped down to tie a shoelace as he finished dressing for the day's basketball practice.

"Do we have a chance for the title?" he said, repeating a question asked by a reporter.

"Why of course we do. We have a good ball club and if things go right we'll give anybody a tough game," he added as he started up the stairs to the fieldhouse court.

This, it would seem at first glance, is a surprising amount of optimism for any coach, especially one starting his big-time career. But those of us who have had any dealings with the new Iowa cage boss realize that by his very nature O'Connor and the customary coaching pessimism would be incompatible bedfellows.

If there's any one word that could characterize O'Connor, it certainly would be "enthusiastic." And from this genuine, so noticeable enthusiasm for his job and the game itself, optimism is a logical result.

What's more, it's the kind of enthusiasm that can't help but be transmitted to his players, something that convinces us that the current Hawkeye cagers will be as spirited and determined a bunch of young men as you'll want to see.

Along this line, it's one of O'Connor's leading theories that the game must be interesting and enjoyable to the players to have any kind of morale and it's for this reason that he states: "Our objective, of course, is to win—but we're going to have some fun playing the game too."

"I don't see why we can't enjoy ourselves at practice while we're learning the game," he says. "Of course, I can be as stern and tough as I have to but generally I'd rather pat a boy on the back than chew him out."

Bucky Strives for Perfection

Mentioning the enjoyable aspect of practice shouldn't be misleading, though, for, as anyone who's watched a drill period this fall can attest, O'Connor is a demanding perfectionist—something basic to his thoughts on the technical aspects of the game.

"When you get right down to it," he explains, "basketball can be seen as a game of habits. And so we work and work on forming good habits by going over something maybe 100 times in one afternoon."

"By that we hope certain situations become almost instinctive and very effective."

You'll note O'Connor said "situations" and not "plays" which to the layman may be splitting hairs but which actually has important significance. Technically O'Connor can list hundreds of plays but he prefers to talk of certain basic situations.

"For instance, in one situation the guard can pass to say Cochrane at forward. From there Ev has maybe seven or eight planned options which he can choose from according to the defense. It's those basic situations that we stress."

In a sense, it's difficult to think of O'Connor as a new coach since he's been connected with Iowa basketball for four years. Part of that time was spent as freshmen coach under Pops Harrison while last year he assisted Rollie Williams with the varsity. But aside for a 10-game span when he took over for the ailing Harrison two years ago, this will be his first crack at the head job.

Incidentally, when O'Connor filled in for Harrison he had seen the Hawks in only two games because of his scouting duties. Yet he guided the team to five conference wins including some fine road victories.

From every indication, on and off the court, Iowa basketball fortunes are in good hands—the hands of Frank (Bucky) O'Connor.

Tulane Starts Plan For De-emphasis

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Tulane university decided Wednesday to impose rigid restrictions on athletic scholarships, recruiting players, scouting and the size of its varsity football squad and asked the other members of the Southeastern conference to follow its lead.

President Rufus C. Harris of Tulane called it a program to "restrain" athletics. He said he had written to the president of each conference member, offering him the program, "which represents largely what will be undertaken at Tulane."

Bradley Quits Missouri Valley

Friendship with Drake Prompts Withdrawal

(From the Wire Services) PEORIA, ILL. — Bradley university is following Drake out of the Missouri Valley conference at the end of the present academic year, Dr. David Blair Owen, university president, announced Wednesday night.

Owen said the Bradley faculty athletic committee, voted unanimously to sever its connections with the league, which it joined in December, 1948.

The committee did not state flatly that the withdrawal was prompted by the conference's refusal to take action in the injury of Drake football star Johnny Bright by an Oklahoma A & M player earlier this fall.

"Duty to Support Drake" But it indicated that it "felt it our duty to support the Drake position" because "we felt it to be morally right and because of the unusually close bond of friendly rivalry which exists between the two institutions."

Drake quit the conference Tuesday night over the league's stand in the Bright case. The statement released by Owen also said that Bradley officials have been concerned for some time over "the relatively loose-knit organization and unwieldy geographical range of the conference."

"It is our hope that the Missouri Valley conference will survive and that it will become a somewhat more compact and close-knit group," the statement said. "We wish it every success and feel honored that we have been included in its membership."

Want New League The Bradley officials added that "it is our hope ultimately to have a part in the formation of a new conference, of a more close-knit and homogeneous nature and covering a considerably smaller geographical area."

"We have no definite plans," they added, "but will be happy to work with Drake and other like-minded institutions in our area in the development of such a group."

Bradley, while quitting in sympathy, cited several other reasons. One is that Bradley has gone begging for conference football games. Drake and Wichita were the only members on Bradley's 1952 grid schedule.

Another stemmed from the conference voiding of a Bradley basketball and one baseball championship after several former Bradley basketball players were implicated in the point-rigging scandal.

Smith Urges Presidents To Correct Abuses

BLOOMINGTON (AP) — Soft-spoken Clyde Smith, resigning football coach of Indiana university, charged Wednesday that the nation's athletic heritage has been sold for "a mess of pottage" and said corrective measures must come from university presidents.

Smith did not absolve coaches of all blame, but said the profession is an honored one. He indicated that coaches are in danger of becoming "whipping boys."

But in the final analysis, Smith said, the decision of the "right or wrongness" of athletic programs rests "squarely with the university presidents."

In his first public statement since he resigned Nov. 6, effective next April 1, Smith said the time has come for universities "to reassess their entire athletic program."

No Fricition Smith did not mention University President Herman B. Wells in his prepared statement. Asked later to elaborate, he said he has no criticism of Wells' policies, and that there was no friction between them.

He said Athletic Director Paul C. (Pooch) Harrell "in no way" interfered with his coaching program and the loyalty of his assistant coaches was "unquestioned."

His decision to resign "is not because of organized or unorganized alumni or student pressure," Smith said.

Cites Principle "The reason is simply that I am unable to agree in principle on the conduct of our athletics. I find I can no longer compromise the boys under my supervision, the university which I represent, the things that I hold to be good and fine about the game of football, or myself."

"If we continue to sell our athletic birthright, and blind ourselves to the real value of athletics," Smith continued, "then we must certainly be willing to accept in part the blame for the inroads made by protected gambling into the field of university athletics."

Smith said coaching is an honored profession, responsible for the present and future physical, mental, spiritual and moral well-being of the athletes.

"If coaching is to remain an honored profession, its members cannot become whipping boys for disgruntled factions that have used the won or lost measuring stick to determine the real value of the athletic program. Neither can presidents permit this."

Indiana won only two of nine games this fall, upsetting Ohio State for its lone Big Ten victory.

Iowa Readies For Broncos

Iowa's basketball team Wednesday continued its preparations for what looms as its toughest opener in years here Saturday night with Western Michigan.

The Broncos will bring much of the same squad that defeated the Hawkeyes at Kalamazoo last year, 58-49, including its two high scorers from that game.

It appears now that the cage squad will not receive any additions from the football team as originally expected. Fred Ruck, two-time letter winner at guard, reported to Coach Bucky O'Connor but then decided against returning to the squad.

Ruck cited a wearing football season and desire to catch up on his studies as his reasons.

Ed Lindsey and Bill Fenton, high school cage stars, also will not go out for the team. Lindsey is currently hobbled by a leg injury.

Iowa will be captained this year by senior guards Bob Clifton and Herald (Skip) Greene, who were elected after a squad meeting Tuesday night.

Gavilan-Bratton Battle to a Draw

CHICAGO (AP) — Johnny Bratton, Chicago, showing a complete reversal of form, Wednesday night fought Cuba's Kid Gavilan, world's welterweight champion, to a blistering 10-round draw in the Chicago Stadium.

Bratton, who held the 147-pound title for 65 days before losing it to Gavilan in New York's Madison Square Garden last May 18, was a 3-1 underdog in the wagering on the nontitle fight.

The referee, William Doty, voted 48-52 in favor of Bratton, while Judge John Bray balloting 52-48 in favor of the titleholder. The other judge, Frank McAdams, scored his tally 50-50.

Says Reds to Free Jailed Archbishop

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — An authoritative source said Wednesday that Archbishop Aloysius Stepinac, first high-ranking Roman Catholic prelate to be jailed by the Communists, will be set free in December.

Archbishop Stepanic, who is serving a 16-year term for alleged World War II collaboration with the Nazis, will be permitted to return to his home in Croatia, the source said.

The disclosure came after Marshal Tito, in a statement published in the Communist party newspaper Borba, said the "Stepinac question would be solved within a month." But he added that "it is clear that he can no longer exercise in our country the function of a high church head."

At the same time, it was revealed that Serbian Orthodox Metropolitan Josip, also accused of wartime collaboration, has been allowed to return to his post from enforced exile in a mountain monastery south of Belgrade.

Both dignitaries had been arrested during Tito's efforts to establish state supremacy over the church.

Archbishop Stepanic was accused by a "people's court" of aiding the pro-Nazi "Ustashi guerrillas of Ante Pavelic during the past war and was sentenced in October, 1946.

Mrs. Campbell, Resident 27 Years, Dies; Rites Pending

Funeral services are pending for Mrs. Catherine Campbell, 64, Iowa City resident for 27 years, who died at Oakdale sanatorium Tuesday evening.

Mrs. Campbell was born June 15, 1887 at Carlyle, Ill., the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Laux. She lived in Carlyle until moving to Iowa City in 1920.

She was married to Charles C. Campbell in 1922 and they farmed in Sharon township for two years before moving back to Iowa City. Survivors include her husband, three sons, two sisters and two brothers.

Friends may call at the Oathout funeral chapel until 10 p.m. Thursday. Services and burial will be at Carlyle later in the week.

State School Meet Closes on Campus

"World War II's victory can still be lost at the conference table, in the classroom or on the battlefield," Prof. I. James Quillen of Stanford university said here Wednesday.

He spoke at a luncheon concluding the conference for school administrators which brought more than 400 school officials to the SU campus.

Quillen expressed the opinion, however, that a world community will emerge from the present crisis because of "economic interdependence, advanced transportation and communication, and destructive weapons."

"To insure a free world," Quillen said, "we must build and maintain military strength, without impairing our economic security."

Pact Nations Agree on Need For Defenses

ROME (AP) — Foreign ministers of the 12 Atlantic Pact nations agreed Wednesday on the "urgency" of creating a European army, including German units.

But their five days' conference failed to agree on methods for creating such a defense force or on any other major problems.

The final communique of the conference disclosed more failures to reach agreements or final decisions than actual progress and pinned the hopes of NATO for definite action on the next conference meeting at Lisbon, Portugal, Feb. 2.

In a final press conference, most of the ministers agreed that the most urgent task is agreement on plans for the European army.

They had heard Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower urge that the project be accorded top priority. But they confessed that a major snag has developed on creation of a supernational political authority to give such an army its orders.

Here is a summary of the five-day sessions:

European army — French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman reported the project was bogged down because of failure to agree on unification on political questions, including command.

Economics — Mutual Security Administrator W. Averell Harriman and his committee of 12 had not completed its report, therefore the council could not judge the economic capability of the member nations to meet military requirements.

Military — NATO reported itself unable to confirm Gen. Eisenhower's plans for 30 to 40 divisions in 1952 and up to 100 divisions (including reserves) by 1954 until the economic report has been received.

Naval command — British Prime Minister Winston Churchill refused to compromise on his demands for a British rather than an American admiral to command the North Atlantic.

Solon Man Fined For Drunk Driving

Edward E. Novotny, Solon, was fined $300 Wednesday in district court on a charge of operating a motor vehicle while intoxicated.

In addition to the fine, Novotny's driver's license was suspended for 60 days. He was arrested Sept. 2, 1951, on highway 218 north of Iowa City, according to the information filed.

Jail-Breakers Nabbed On Island after Try For Iowa Border

ALEDO, ILL. (AP) — A 19-year-old red-haired gun girl and two of three youths who escaped jail with her were recaptured Wednesday on an island in the Mississippi river where they landed by mistake.

The three thought they had reached the Iowa shore in a stolen boat Tuesday night, but woke up to find themselves surrounded by water.

Thelma Wallace, who grabbed a pistol and freed three companions at the county jail here Tuesday night, was captured with Robert Graham, 21, and Ben Runyon, 22, all of Davenport.

Leo Roussel, 19, who separated from the others after the escape, was arrested by FBI agents late in the day at Davenport.

Authorities said the escapees stole a car in Aledo and drove to Keithsburg, Ill., on the Mississippi river, where Roussel apparently left them.

The other three stole a boat and set out in darkness for the Iowa shore. Instead they landed on the island, but thought they had reached Iowa and cast the boat adrift.

They discovered their error in the morning and shouted for help. Residents of the area notified authorities, who rowed out to the island and took the fugitives into custody.

CIO Answers Taft Charges

WASHINGTON (AP) — A spokesman for the CIO political action committee accused Sen. Robert Taft (R.-O.) Wednesday of starting the contest of caricature in which Taft charged he was "scurrilously" attacked during the 1950 campaign.

"We got the idea from Senator Taft," Jacob Clayman of Columbus, secretary-treasurer of the Ohio CIO-PAC, told the senate elections subcommittee. The subcommittee is investigating charges and counter-charges of unfair tactics and huge spending in the Ohio senatorial contest.

The CIO backed Joseph T. Ferguson, Democratic state auditor whom Taft beat by 431,000 votes.

Taft in testimony Monday accused the CIO of conducting a campaign against him based on "a tissue of lies," misrepresenting his stand on issues, and attacking him personally. In particular he criticized a campaign comic book called the "Taft Story."

Clayman, undertaking to answer specific complaints by Taft, read from a leaflet dealing with those who opposed the Taft-Hartley labor act.
