French Marshal Might Cause Trouble in NATO

BY J. M. ROBERTS

Assistant From News Agency

France and prominent member of European military history, now with North Atlantic forces, under Allied banner, eager to see United States joined in defense of Europe.

In view of the fact that France has long been an advocate of alliance with the United States, it is reported that the French Marshal might cause trouble for NATO if the United States were to join in defense of Europe.

The Marshal, who is known for his strong views on military strategy, has repeatedly expressed his belief that the United States should play a more active role in European defense. His views have been particularly vocal since the establishment of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which includes France and the United States as key members.

If the United States were to join NATO, the Marshal might use his influence to push for more significant terms and conditions for the United States to join. This could lead to tensions within NATO and complicate efforts to strengthen the alliance.

In any case, the Marshal's views and the potential implications for NATO's future will be closely watched in Europe and beyond.
