Polio Spreading At Sioux City

Number Dead Climbs to 12

SIOUX CITY, I A. — The polio death toll in lowa climbed to 12 today and the number of cases reported to the Iowa Health Department rose to about 1,080, according to state health authorities.

The two latest fatalities were both children, one of them a 3-month-old baby. The list of juvenile victims grows by a child or two almost daily now.

The two latest cases reported to the state brought for the year's total about 76 cases, and that number is expected to climb rapidly because there are now only a few months left in the epidemic.

The difficulty of defending a motor vehicle from possible polio virus contamination is shown by the recent case of a 8-month-old baby who died from polio despite the fact that his mother and the walls of his house had been disinfected by antiseptic tablets for 9 months.

A Sioux City family recently brought a baby home from the hospital after he had been discharged from there with the disease.
