dustrial development, regulations on land use, and the ability to attract people. It is true that some people or the public may have reservations about it, but P&G's success can serve as a model for similar developments in other cities.

And I think you're bound to find that the future of Iowa City, like the future of any city, is going to be very much related to what happens here. We want Iowa City to become a part of the land of change, a part of the atmosphere of culture and community that is developing here.

And we will be as strong as our city is. In many ways, we're already stronger than we thought a month ago. And I hope you'll agree that if Iowa City isn't a good place to be today, it'll be a good place to be tomorrow. P&G has announced that it like Iowa City and is going to build a large plant there. There are many other factors that contribute to the success of the company, but the anticipation of such an investment is certainly one of them.

Are All Gasolines Pretty Much the Same?

Once in a while you may hear someone say: “The gas is just as good” for Standard gasoline. Why, all proprietors are alike, won’t they? They all come out of the same place, have the same name, don’t they? But the answer is no. The person saying this is doing so to cover the fact that he does not have the Standard gasoline.

The oil company that supplies the Standard gasoline is the one that makes it. It is the same oil company that makes all Standard gasoline.
