The Olympic Dilemma

The Olympic games are supposed to highlight individual, rather than national, competition. Medals are awarded for first, second, and third place finishes. No broken totals are kept by the Olympic officials. National pride, however, demands that everyone keep a record of team standings. The newspapers and press associations have set up a point system that has been generally accepted. They print it for their readers throughout the games. Olympic officials, who at first pretended that team standings did not exist, now consent to discuss the standings.

American national pride suffered a wound the past two weeks when Russia ran off with the team honors in the Winter Olympics Games at Garmisch-Partenkirchen, Germany. The Russians scored 121 points. The Hussinns scored 119 points by putting over 28 of their athletes in the winter Olympic games with the United States winning on points.

But the Russians have been training for four years to prepare this. We had better be prepared to take this thing over too, this summer.

How is it to be recorded? Should the United States (and other sin-statured countries) continue to send their athletes and compete in all the winter events, which they passed up?

The Russian and American teams fought a close battle in the summer Olympic Games with the United States winning on points.

The Russians have been training for four years to prepare this. We had better be prepared to take this thing over too, this summer.

No leakage, no term papers, three meetings a week for three hours of credit, three objectives, a seminar graded on a curve, the test cost $2.50. Anything else you want to know, before you commit yourself?

100 Years of Kindergarten

Children's Gardens Were First Started By a Young Wisconsin Mother

BUTTERFIELD, Wis., Feb. 1—One hundred years ago a young woman came to this part of Wisconsin and started the first kindergarten, which was considered an education menace to the profession of teaching.

The spectre of the first kindergarten in Wisconsin was in the air last week, with the opening ceremonies in an effort to honor the memory of that unique institution in the kindergarten movement in this state. The first kindergarten in Wisconsin was opened by the following in 1819 at the Union School in Attica, Wis.: Miss Lisette Blanchard, Miss Emma S. Proctor, and Miss Elizabeth W. Proctor.

For her, Carl Schurz, then editor of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, said: "It was a chance in practice of the old-time school for the children, and it was then that the kindergarten movement was started.

It is a struggle against the entire system of oppression that the communists have erected in their own countries.
