Red Army Backs, U.S. Questions
Ousting of Top Kremlin Leaders

Washington Asks Khrushchev

Washington - U.S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson today announced that the United States had asked the Soviet Union to return the three former top Kremlin leaders who were ousted last week.

The United States has been seeking for several days to get the three Moscow leaders back. The United States has been seeking for several days to get the three Moscow leaders back.

Washington and Moscow are currently at loggerheads over a number of issues, including the withdrawal of U.S. military bases from Germany, the status of Berlin, and the question of disarmament. The U.S. government has been pushing for a reduction in nuclear weapons, while the Soviet Union has been resisting such moves.

The three leaders who were ousted were Nikita Khrushchev, Leonid Brezhnev, and Yuri Andropov. They were removed from their positions due to disagreements with the Soviet leadership over foreign policy and domestic issues.

Washington has been pressing for the return of the three leaders as a way to improve relations with Moscow. Acheson said that the United States would continue to press for their return, but that no specific timeframe has been set for their return.

Acheson's announcement came shortly after a meeting between U.S. and Soviet officials in Geneva. The meeting was aimed at resolving the crisis over the ousting of the three leaders.

The ousting of the three leaders has caused a great deal of speculation about the future of the Soviet Union and its leadership. Some analysts have suggested that the ousting could lead to a change in the political direction of the country.

The United States has been seeking to engage in direct communication with the new leaders, but so far has been met with silence. Acheson said that the United States would continue to push for direct talks with the new leadership.
