Deterioration in Cyprus

After years of intermittent violence, costing more than a thousand casualties, the situation in the strategic British Crown Colony of Cyprus is beginning to drift toward chaos.

There is no longer a struggle of Greek Cypriots against British rule and air defense. It is now turning into a struggle between the British on one side and the Greek and the Cypriots in the Northwest of Cyprus on the other, between the Greek and the Turks, and finally between the Greek Cypriots and the Greeks, the whole of which are being divided among the United Nations, or the Greek and the Turks, and the United Nations, which are the only parties to the conference.

The tragic issue of this deterioration is that it is a living thing, while the British, who have long abandoned their 'imperialist' stand, are advancing a new plan offering easily self-government for the island and self-determination in about ten years. Bearing in mind acceptable conditions, other than from guarantees for British bases on the island, to which there have been no objection, this plan would be negotiable for the Greeks. But the Turks are adamant against getting their hands on the island, comprising about 17 per cent of the popula-

Letters to the Editor

Complaints, Correction

TO THE EDITOR:

This is a correction than an attempt to bring light to the darkness that is spreading over the island of Cyprus. It is not a matter of politics, but of human rights and justice. The United Nations has failed to keep its promise to the Greek Cypriots, who have been living under Turkish occupation for decades.

The Turks are the aggressors, not the Greeks. They have been occupying the island since 1913, when they invaded it. Since then, they have been committing atrocities against the Greek Cypriot population, which has been living on the island for centuries.

I urge everyone to stand with the Greeks and support their struggle for freedom and justice. The United Nations must take action to ensure that the Greek Cypriots are able to live in peace and security on their own island.

Sincerely,

A four-part program to protect the dental health of children was outlined Tuesday evening by Dr. William G. Gondolfi of the RVU College of Dentistry for members of the Lincoln Junior French-speaking Mothers' Club, Inc. City.

Dr. Gondolfi outlined the steps to take care of children's teeth and demonstrated the use of dental equipment at a recent meeting of the Department of Agriculture, Bozeman, Ala.

Called "How to Spot the Symptoms of Oral Disease," the presentation was to the audience of 30. Dr. Gondolfi demonstrated the use of dental equipment, including hand and electric drills and a mirror that can be fitted over the mouth.

They also showed a film on the treatment of decay, which should be removed at the time of examination, and the importance of proper brushing.

Dr. Gondolfi said that the mouth is the first step in the prevention of disease and that the most effective way to keep the mouth healthy is through regular brushing and flossing.

He also emphasized the importance of seeing a dentist regularly, at least once a year, for a complete examination to ensure that any problems are caught early.

Music Hour at Macbride Features Norma Cross

The Wednesday evening music hour brought to local radio station WMU, featured Martin's French-speaking program director, as a guest on the station.

Dr. Gondolfi said that the audience of 30 was to be praised, everyone of whom was present to attend the class.

He also said plans are being made to hold a special meeting in the coming months, which will be attended by a trip to the state capitol.

Dr. Gondolfi said that the group wishes to do research in the future on the topic of dental health.
