Alaskans Snap Up Statehood, 5-1

Many Polling Places Run Out of Ballots

JUNEAU, Alaska—Alaska's earliest Alaskans have snapped up the statehood offer of yesterday's ballots more than 54 times faster than the day before.

More than half of the state's registered voters had cast their ballots by noon yesterday, according to the official tally. The state's first election on this date was 1956.

The officials planned to count the ballots at the state capitol today.

The balloting process is expected to conclude tomorrow, but the official results will not be announced until June 3.

The state's first election was held in 1956, when the voters were asked whether they wanted statehood.

The economy is expected to benefit from the statehood vote, with many job opportunities opening up.

The vote was 5-1 in favor of statehood, with the official tally of 65,000 votes.

Ike Talks Missiles, Integration, Quincy

WASHINGTON — President Eisenhower told a special news conference Wednesday that plans to develop missiles that can hit targets anywhere in the world are inevitable because of the "clash" of nations. He said that in the case of missiles, it was not a question of the United States but of the whole world. He added that the development of missiles was not a question of whether the United States would or would not develop them, but of whether it would wait to do so or do it alone.

In brief, the United States is going to develop missiles and so is the rest of the world. So there is no question of whether the United States will or will not develop them, but of how long it will take to develop them. The President said that the United States must have a good program for a few years ahead, but that it is not a question of how many years, but of how long it will take to develop the program.

War Powers

WASHINGTON — The President has no plans to use the war powers under the War Powers Act of 1961, administered by the United States, at the moment. The President said that there is no reason for him to use the war powers at the moment. He added that the United States may use the war powers in the future, but that it is not a question of whether the United States will or will not use the war powers, but of whether it will or will not use them. The President said that the United States must have a good program for a few years ahead, but that it is not a question of how many years, but of how long it will take to develop the program.
