Airman, Who Took Simulated Moon Trip, Gets Discharge

Fairfield, Conn. — A. Farrell, the 23-year-old airman who took a simulated trip to experimental space, was freed from his Air Force hitch and discharged today.

Farrell spent seven months at Edwards AFB and said his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Farrell of Southport, Conn., were "overjoyed" by the news.

Farrell said he had been ordered to bombard the building with gas grenades, and had been warned that this was "not a drill." However, he insisted that the orders were routine.

The Air Force said the discharge was based on "medical grounds," but explained that it was "not a discharge for cause." The Air Force did not elaborate.

Farrell was a member of the 23rd Missile Squadron, based at Edwards AFB.

"It's tough to accept," Farrell said. "I've been in the Air Force for seven months, and now I'm just being sent back to school."

Farrell said he had been in the Air Force since the age of 18, and had been trained as a missile operator.

The Air Force said Farrell had been discharged because of "a physical limitation," but did not specify what that limitation was.

Farrell said he planned to return to school and continue his education.

"I'm just going to keep working hard and trying to do the best I can," he said. "I've got a lot of work to do, and I'm going to do it."
3 Killed In Car-Bus Collision

A group of old friends who had never visited the same city before decided to take a trip together. They all agreed that it was the perfect opportunity to explore a new place and make lasting memories. After a long day of sightseeing, they decided to grab a bite to eat at a local restaurant. As they sat down to enjoy their meal, they noticed a group of people gathered outside the restaurant. Curious, they stepped outside to see what was happening.

A few blocks away, a car had collided with a bus, causing a terrible accident. The friends immediately rushed to the scene, providing assistance to the injured and notifying emergency services. They remained at the scene until the paramedics arrived, helping to ensure that everyone was accounted for.

The next day, they learned that three individuals had been killed in the accident. The friends felt a deep sense of loss and were determined to do something to honor their memories. They decided to create a memorial fund to help the families of the victims and support the community in the wake of the tragedy.

In the weeks that followed, the friends organized a charity event to raise funds for the memorial fund. They invited other organizations and community members to join in the effort, and the event was a great success. The friends were proud of what they had accomplished and felt a sense of closure knowing that they had done what they could to honor the victims.

In the end, the friends realized that they had not only created a lasting memory of their own trip but had also helped to support the community in a time of need. They felt grateful for the experience and the lessons learned, and they continued to stay connected, always looking for ways to make a positive impact on the world.
Net Hoplites
To Be Watched Closely Today

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. — The Brooklyn Dodgers will have no spectacular pitcher and no home-bred stars on their starting rotation when they take the U.S. tour championship game over to the Big Apple tonight. But they have a lot of hoplites who will be well worth watching.

The Dodgers plan to take on only those who have opening day assignments, and there will be some interesting battle of two former champs. In the leadoff game, the Dodgers will face the St. Louis Cardinals, who have four former champs in their starting rotation. In the second game, the Dodgers will face the Chicago Cubs, who have three former champs in their lineup.

The Brooklyn Dodgers will open the season against the St. Louis Cardinals tonight at Ebbets Field in a battle of two former champs. The Dodgers will try to repeat their 1954 World Series victory over the Cardinals, and the Cardinals will be out for revenge.
