Segregationists Prepare for Final Stand

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Washington, March 27 (AP) - Segregationists hunkered down here today in a last-ditch stand against court-ordered integration of schools.

Protests and demonstrations continued across the country today - on campuses, in the streets and at the ballot box - as segregationists prepared for a final stand against court-ordered integration of schools.

The protests, which have been a regular feature of the school integration battles, were expected to continue through the day as segregationists prepared for a final stand against court-ordered integration of schools.

In Texas, a state where segregation has been particularly strong, the protests were especially intense. In Dallas, hundreds of segregationists gathered in front of the courthouse to protest the court's ruling.

In other states, such as Alabama and Mississippi, segregationists held similar rallies to express their opposition to integration.

The protests were met with heavy police presence and occasional clashes with demonstrators.

The Supreme Court ruled in 1954 that segregation in public schools was illegal, setting off a series of legal battles across the country as segregationists fought to maintain their system of apartheid.

The court's decision was seen as a turning point in the civil rights movement, and it paved the way for other landmark decisions in the fight for equal rights.

In the years that followed, integration efforts were met with resistance and violence, but the Supreme Court's decision helped to bring about a gradual and sometimes painful change in the way Americans viewed race and segregation.

Today, as the 60th anniversary of the court's decision approaches, it is a reminder of the progress that has been made and the challenges that still remain in the fight for equality.
SUI Scientist Makes Report At Congress in Portugal

LISBON, Portugal - A new form of research in a discipline that is believed to underpin current science is being carried out in Portugal. The new research, which is centered around the study of the behavior of the brain, has already identified a number of phenomena that are not yet well understood.

The findings, which confirm the presence of certain neurotransmitters in the brain, will form the basis of a new model for understanding the way in which the brain operates. The findings are expected to have significant implications for the treatment of a range of neurological disorders.

Workers involved in the research will be presented with the findings at a forthcoming conference in Portugal. The conference will attract researchers from around the world, and will provide a platform for the exchange of ideas and the development of new research directions.

The findings suggest that the presence of certain neurotransmitters in the brain is related to the way in which the brain processes information. The research has already identified a number of phenomena that are not yet well understood, and which are likely to have significant implications for the treatment of a range of neurological disorders.

Shinners, Psychologists Have Similar Copper Practices

President George Bush, who has been involved in a number of international diplomatic efforts, has said that he will continue to support the efforts of the United Nations Security Council to resolve the situation in the Middle East.

In a speech given in Washington, D.C., Bush said that the United States will continue to work with the United Nations to achieve a stable and just peace in the region.

Bush said that the United States will continue to support the efforts of the Security Council to resolve the situation in the Middle East, which he described as "a complex and dangerous situation." He added that the United States will continue to work with the United Nations to achieve a stable and just peace in the region.

Undercover Agent Traps Illegal Waterfowl Packers

ANNAPOLIS - A federal undercover agent on Monday tracked down a "loose chicken" who was picked up by a group of waterfowl packs at a Maryland hunting preserve.

A federal agent, who was working with the Maryland Natural Resources Police, spotted the chicken walking through the preserve and followed it to a stand located on an island in the middle of a large pond.

CHICAGO (AP) — American League President Joe Reichler said Tuesday night that there was no pressure on him to bring the Chicago White Sox back into the National League. He said he had been pressured in recent years to do so, but that was because the American League believed it had been given too much weight in the National League.

Hawks Keep Overhead Attack In Gear, Work on Defense

The Hawks have worked on their defense in recent games, but their overhead attack has continued to be a strong point. Coach Bob Knight said the team has made progress in recent games, and he expects them to continue to improve.

"We've been working on our defense," Knight said. "But we've also been working on our overhead attack. We've been making some improvements, and I think we'll be able to continue to improve."
