Segregationist Wins In Georgia Primaries

ATLANTA — In a victory that underscores President Eisenhower's determination to integrate the South, a segregationist won the special election for the U.S. Senate from Georgia today.

The election was called when House Speaker Sam Rayburn of Indiana died on Feb. 22 in Washington. The Senate seat had been vacated by the death of Robert T. Overton, a Democrat who had represented the state for 28 years.

The segregationist, an attorney, was the favorite of the Southern states, where he had been active in the fight against integration. He was opposed by the Democratic candidate, a state legislator, who had been endorsed by the NAACP.

The victory was hailed by segregationists as a major step forward in the fight against integration. It was seen as a rebuff to President Eisenhower, who had promised to work for a more integrated South.

The election was held today to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Overton, a Democrat who represented the state of Vermont.

The Democratic candidate was a state legislator, who had been endorsed by the NAACP.
