Radford Testifies On Arms Contracts

"Little Outside Influence From Retired Military"

WASHINGTON — Alger Hiss, former aide to President John F. Kennedy, said Friday that outside influence on the United States is "very small." But he added that military-retirement officers of the armed forces may be a larger group than any other in government and that they retire and go back to work for any number of major corporations to be a director counsel, vice president, or something, according to a television news report Friday night.

Hiss, a former aide to President Kennedy, was one of two persons to testify Friday before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence for the second session of the 90th Congress. He is a Harvard University graduate and former director of the State Department's intelligence division.

Hiss, who is currently a member of the board of directors of the American Institute of Architects, was asked by the chairman, Sen. John B. Anderson, D-Ill., about the influence of former military officers in government.

Hiss said he believes there is a large group of former military officers who go back to work for major corporations after retirement. He added that he believes this group may be larger than any other in government.

Hiss also testified that the military-retirement officers may be more influential than those in other fields because they have a "very strong personal connection" to the armed forces.

"Witschi Jubilee" At University of Paris—
SUI Prof Honored
International honors were bestowed upon Ernst Witschi, professor of anatomy at the University of Paris, in a special "Witschi Jubilee" held at the University of Paris recently.

In connection with the celebration of the four hundredth and fiftieth anniversaries of the University of Paris, the president of the University selected Witschi to receive the title of academician of the Academy of Paris, the highest honor the University can bestow on a scholar. The citation, which was read by the rector of the University, was presented to Witschi at a special ceremony in the Grand Theatre of the University.

In addition, Witschi was presented with a special certificate of recognition and a copy of the charter of the Academy of Paris. The ceremony was attended by a large number of scholars and students from the University of Paris and other universities in France.

The "Witschi Jubilee" was held in honor of Witschi's contributions to the field of anatomy, particularly in the study of the human spine and its related structures. Witschi's work has had a significant impact on the field of medicine and has been widely recognized for its excellence.

"Ahh, A Cotton Candy Stand"

"300 Calories, So What?"

With her happy prize to keep her company, Carolyn stepped aboard a smiling, spinning ride worthy of a place in a space-flight training program, and turned over and over and over. The finish line was set up on the center aisle of the magical compartment, but Carolyn hadn't set sail on the ride. She had dropped off into black and white when the pair emerged from a place in a space that was Iowa City, was Jerry Shows, now appearing at the Lucas showgrounds.

Carolyn, left the camera-bedecked photography in the cotton candy stand, the merriest of them all. Now all she had to do was decide whether the photographers at the baseball throwing booth or the baseball tossing booth. She decided to photograph her fun as it was all外包 from booth to booth at the Century 20th Century show, for young and old, from nine to ninety."
