High Schoolers Blend with Science

By DON KLADSTRUP Staff Writer

Excitement and enthusiasm were high Friday as five special Iowa high school students voiced their opinions in an interview regarding the second Junior Science Symposium at SUU.

"This is just about the ultimate," Tom Myers, 18, of Webster City said. "This blend of students with science is just the greatest."

Myers is one of five students from Iowa selected to deliver talks on their field of interest at 8:30 a.m. today in the new Chemistry Auditorium. His topic is "An Experimental Study of the Application of the Coanda Effect to Rocket Nozzles."

OTHER STUDENTS and their topics are Robert Allen, 17, Earlham, "The Synthesis of Amino Acids in the Primitive Earth's Atmosphere;" Stephen Patterson, 17, Perry, "Nesting Habits of Iowa Birds;" Judy Landgraf, 17, Davenport, "The Relation of Gravity and Root Curvature;" and Candace Ann Schau, 17, Bettendorf, "A Study of the Persistence in Constant Darkness of Induced Abnormal Sleep Rhythms in the Leaves of Bean Plants."

Miss Schau thought the best part of the Symposium was the chance to "meet others also interested in science. You can't always do that in high school," she said, "because there are usually so few."

All five were selected after submitting abstracts pertaining to some special area of science in which they were interested. After the abstracts were examined by their high school teachers, the reports were sent to certain faculty members on the SUU campus where the final choice of student speakers was made.

MOST OF THE students said the opportunity to participate in the Symposium would spur them on to "bigger and better things."

"I consider this the beginning of a more complicated project," Robert Allen said. "I plan to enroll in pre-medicine at SUU in order to continue my study. I will probably branch out into a protein synthesis study," he said.

Miss Schau, however, had a slightly different attitude. "I'm extremely interested in all this," she said, "but I suppose I won't have an awful lot of time when I get to college."

THE SYMPOSIUM will not end today for these students. They will receive an expense-paid trip to Washington, D.C., April 22. The group will represent one of 19 symposiums held over the entire country this year. The Symposium, sponsored by the U.S. Army Research Office in Durham, N.C., and the Army Weapons Command in Rock Island, Ill., will end April 24.

The students will be able to meet with experts in their particular field of interest. Lt. Wendel G. Van Awken, an army representative, said.

Bowen Tells Iowa Press Association—

Education Keys Economic Growth

DES MOINES — Education is the motive power behind economic growth, Howard R. Bowen, president-elect of SUU told a group of Iowa editors and publishers here Friday. He said that even though the United States has carried investment in education further than most countries and has reaped much of the growth that can be derived from this source, much more work is needed before the educational advancement of this country is complete.

Bowen spoke on "Education and Economic Development" at a meeting of the Iowa Press Association.

DRAWING UPON HIS observations as consultant to the U.S. government in economic affairs in Africa, Asia, Europe, and countries of the Soviet bloc, Bowen said that natural resources have less to do with the economic progress of a country than do the education and skills of its people.

"With only slight exaggeration," he noted, "it can be said that people are the basic resource, that most production derives from people, and that if economic growth is to be achieved, it will be the result of what people are and what they do. It takes little more than educated, skilled, healthy, energetic, and motivated people to create a great economy and a great civilization."

BOWEN OUTLINED a number of tasks currently confronting American higher education. The first, he said, is to educate more persons for the learned professions. "Not only is the domestic demand for persons in all these

High School Guests Stump SUI Professor

Anyone questioning the quality of students produced by Iowa high schools no doubt would reconsider their position had they attended any one of the Iowa Science, Engineering and Humanities Symposium sessions Thursday or Friday.

After delivering a technical address on "Space Technology: A Challenge to the Chemical Engineer" Friday noon in the Main Lounge of the Union, Dr. Karl Kammermeyer, professor and head of chemical engineering at SUU, was asked several highly technical queries by the high schoolers. There were two questions which Kammermeyer was unable to answer. He is considered an expert in his field.

Kammermeyer used slides to illustrate some of the current problems facing space technologists. He pointed to contemporary studies of heat, food, elimination of fuel storage, problems which must be ironed out for successful manned space flights.

He voiced displeasure that 248 of 250 Ph.D.'s graduating in chemistry from the Midwest have migrated to the coastal areas of the United States.

Citing new developments in the field, Kammermeyer said "One of the current areas of study among chemical engineers concerned with space technology is developing methods of obtaining drinking water from urine during flights."

In response to a student query, he stressed that "Astronauts are the most important component of our nation's space technology program — our main concern is and should be their safety."

Regents Get Report on Housing Cost

By ERIC ZOECKLER News Editor

The possibility of single students subsidizing married students in University housing should be eliminated, some members of the state Board of Regents indicated Friday.

The comments came during debate on whether the Regents should approve preliminary plans for a $3 million married student housing project at Iowa State University at Ames. The Board voted its approval, 6 to 2, with Mrs. Joseph Rosenfield and Mrs. Harriette Valentine, both of Des Moines, dissenting.

UNDER THE IOWA Dormitory Law of 1919, SUU and other state institutions of higher learning are required to treat both married student housing and dormitories as a single financial system.

Critics of the system contend when a large married student housing project is undertaken, profits accrued from dormitory rents go toward payment of married student housing debts.

THE DEBATE OVER married student housing projects was triggered Thursday when Mrs. Valentine said state universities are encouraging student marriages by building attractive, low-cost apartments for married students.

She stuck to that opinion Friday and added, "When we do, we are doing our students as well as this country a disservice."

Students living in the proposed project at ISU would pay an estimated $75 a month for a two-bedroom apartment. ISU married students living in barracks pay $28 a month, while SUU students in comparable housing pay $68 a month.

WOMEN, BOWEN SAID, constitute another underprivileged although scarcely a minority group, with fewer attending college and graduating than men, and with many gifted women falling to follow through with their education, or taking work below their capabilities.

"If women should seriously take up high-level occupations," he said, "the number of technical and professional personnel in America might be increased by perhaps a third in 20 years."

Although claiming "no special wisdom" in the area of American higher education "where little is known and where tradition and prejudice prevail," Bowen pointed out that if it could be found to shorten, with out emasculating, the educational process there would be an economic gain of no small consequence.

"I AM INCLINED to think, however, that the greatest potential for reducing the time in college would be to improve secondary education, and thus to free the college years of instruction in elementary English, foreign language and mathematics."

In the field of vocational training, Bowen commended as progressive the current movement toward establishment of community colleges and technical schools for developing skills in the various middle-level trades and professions, and called for colleges and universities to keep in touch with long-range labor market requirements and plan their offerings and their counseling of students accordingly.

She was selected by the whirl of a wheel of fortune, spun by Ryuji Takuchi, the Japanese ambassador.

SUI's General Budget Will Rise $1.7 Million

Regents Give Exchange Plan Tacit Approval

DES MOINES — Tacit approval of SUU's proposed exchange with Southern Negro colleges next fall was given at the Board of Regents meeting here Friday.

A brief oral report on the exchange by Ray Heffner, Vice President of Faculties and Instruction, and a written summary of the program presented in the docket of the meeting were not acted upon by the Board.

Since SARE has offered to pay the expenses of living and travel which the exchange may entail, no financial matters required the Board's approval. The report was given simply to inform the Board of SUU's plans.

The Board's only question about the exchange was its purpose. Heffner said, "The major impetus for this comes from students and faculty interested in improving Negro education and informing students of the social problems now existing in the South."

It was also pointed out that the institutions to participate in the exchange would not necessarily be all-Negro colleges, but that a majority of their students would probably be Negroes.

President Virgil M. Hancher told the Board that this program would be "completely voluntary."

State Schools Report Wind Damage

By JON VAN Editorial Page Editor

DES MOINES — It's an ill wind that blows nobody good, and the weather around Iowa's state schools has been pretty sick lately.

The State College of Iowa and Iowa State University both reported to the Board of Regents Friday that requests they had made for money to repair windstorm damage had been turned down by the Executive Council of Iowa (made up of Gov. Harold Hughes and other high state officials).

State institutions, such as SCI and ISU, are not insured with commercial agencies. When damage from something such as wind occurs, the state pays the repair bill for the institution. They are said to be self-insured.

In order to avoid excess paper work, the Executive Council told school officials they must have $1,500 worth of damage before the Council would allocate the funds.

If the first bill was not big enough, it was suggested that the institutions should save repairs until $1,500 worth is accumulated. Then the bills could be submitted at one time. This would mean holding the repairs up, since bills may not be accepted for repairs which have already been made.

Two SUUlowans Injured

Two SUU students were injured Friday afternoon when their motorcycle collided with a car as they were attempting to pass the vehicle. John W. Carrigg, A2, Cedar Rapids, the driver of the motorcycle, was in fair condition at University Hospitals with facial cuts, bruises, and a severed leg artery. A passenger, Tony Geiger, A2, Coralville, was listed in good condition with a head injury, bruises and a sprained ankle. The driver of the car, Forrest E. Poston, 55, 517 Holt Ave., was not injured. $1 Million Short, Banker Charged FAIRFIELD, Ill. (AP) — A $6,000-a-year banker-clergyman who had lived lavishly was charged with embezzlement Friday after federal band examiners found a $72,371 discrepancy in books of the Fairfield National Bank.

Lee Brown, a cashier-bookkeeper at the bank, was charged with embezzling $15,000. The FBI said the bank examiners still are trying to track down the $57,371 irregularity uncovered by an audit.

Mayor Zack Smith, owner of a paint store, said the feelings of this farming community of 6,300 population are "surprise and embarrassment" that speculations about Brown's high living may have had a basis in fact.

BROWN WROTE a note saying as much. Brown, 29, had been with the bank 10 years. He recently built a $30,000 country home for his wife and two children. He kept registered dogs and livestock and about a dozen race horses on the farm.

Bank President D. L. Garrison said he had discussed the charges with Brown "because they seemed inconsistent with being a banker, but we never suspected anything until last week."

That was when Garrison found Brown's note in the night depository. This followed what Garrison said was a routine request that Brown bring the theft books up to date.

THE NOTE, Garrison said, related that Brown had been tampering with the books for seven years. During that time, Brown was ordained a Baptist minister and preached occasionally in a rural church, participated in the Junior Chamber of Commerce, Young Republicans organization and local men's clubs.

Schmidhauser Blasts GOP Voting Record

John R. Schmidhauser, Democratic congressional candidate from the First District, charged Friday incumbent Fred Schwengel and other members of the Iowa Congressional delegation as having "callously voted to kill the vitally important domestic food stamp plan."

Speaking in Bettendorf, Schmidhauser contended that the stamp plan would provide Iowa's beef producers with greater markets at a time when they are suffering from disastrously low prices.

Schmidhauser explained that, under the food stamp plan, people on relief are given coupons to be used as money in retail stores for the purchase of food.

He added that the project has been undertaken as a pilot project in West Virginia and has had "a considerable impact in increasing the consumption of red meat."

"Schwengel's negative vote on the food stamp plan and the wheat bill rank in my estimation with his dogged opposition to the highly successful Feed Grains Program," Schmidhauser said. He added that Schwengel owed an explanation to farm producers in this district on his voting record.

Then the union leaders left so the negotiators for more than 200 rail lines could state management positions to the mediators.

Beyond saying they would return at 9:30 a.m. today union spokesmen had no comment — noting that Johnson had requested both sides to refrain from talking for publication until the negotiations end.

Before they began their separate sessions — face-to-face bargaining will come later — representatives of both sides met briefly with Johnson in the White House rose garden. There they were told that the results of their efforts will have profound bearings on the future of all collective bargaining in America.

Only strenuous last-ditch efforts Thursday night by Johnson brought the 15-day postponement of walk-out which had been scheduled for 12:01 a.m., local time.

Only 90 minutes before the deadline, a White House announcement disclosed the postponement, based on these points:

● Halting by the unions of their two-day-old strike against the Illinois Central Railroad.

● Revocation by the railroads of their orders to start posting job-eliminating new work rules at 12:01, a step which would have brought a walkout by the unions.

Regents Pass $22,410,250 '64-'65 Budget

Include Provisions For Tuition Rises With Aid Increases

DES MOINES — SUI will increase its general operating budget by nearly $1.7 million over the 1963-64 outlay, including a record $750,000 earmarked for increased enrollment figures.

The State Board of Regents Friday gave preliminary approval to the 1964-65 budget of $22,410,250 which covers SUU's cost of teaching, research and some public service activities.

Included among the increases is $347,045 budgeted for various growth and modernization. The largest share of this will be $158,000 for an increase in student aid funds, in recognition of the recent increase in tuition and fees. Another $75,000 of the total will be earmarked for additional scholarship need by students to offset the increased costs.

A 2.9 per cent increase of the $401,997 faculty and staff salary budget will be available for selected merit increases and other salary adjustments. These will include provisions for promotions, emergency adjustments and upgrading unfilled new positions already authorized among individual members of the teaching, research, professional, and administrative staffs.

The budget also calls for an increase of $16,790 to upgrade several general service positions.

AN ADDITIONAL $49,500 will be budgeted for expanding SUU's 12-week summer session for 1964-65.

The Board also approved separate budgets for SUU's health service facilities:

University Hospitals — $11,921,925, an increase of $951,857 over the 1963-64 budget.

Psychopathic Hospital — $1,574,700, up $25,000.

Hospital School for Severely Handicapped Children — $337,860, up $172,880.

State Bacteriological Laboratory — $495,975, a decrease of $6,000 due to an estimated reduction in fee income.

Salary increases at the health centers include $10,900 for professional and administrative staff at University Hospitals.

ALSO, $10,850 for general staff at University Hospitals, $29,000 for professional and administrative staff at Psychopathic Hospital, $3,968 for professional and administrative staff at Bacteriological Laboratories, $6,586 for general service staff at Bacteriological Laboratories, $3,500 for teaching, professional and administrative staff at the Hospital School, and $1,500 for general service staff at the Hospital School.

State appropriations will provide 72 per cent ($16,161,250) for SUU's general educational operating budget next year and students fees will provide 23 per cent, of $5,289,000. Other sources of support next year will be $850,000 which SUU will receive from various agencies as reimbursement for "overhead" and a total of $110,000 in other income and balances carried forward from the present year.

FORTY-THREE per cent of the increase will be devoted to providing teachers and supplies for additional students next fall.

In other action Friday the State Board of Regents:

Approved contracts for extensive remodeling part of the Quadrangle. Four contracts totaling about $383,000, were awarded.

Gave approval to preliminary plans for a $133,500 remodeling job in one of the SUU Medical Laboratories and authorized purchase of equipment for the Mentally Retarded Children's Center and the Engineering Building addition.

Approved construction of an observatory south of Iowa City. Contracts totaled about $90,000.

Battle for rights becomes universal

THE FIGHT AGAINST racial prejudice has at last moved from the domain of one small group into the arena of the entire University. The most dramatic recent example of the change is the student exchange program spearheaded by SARE-Friends of SNCC and supported by the University administration, Greek housing units, and the University Committee on Human Rights.

The trial program would allow the exchange of ten students from SUU with ten from southern predominantly Negro institutions, in an effort to promote racial understanding.

Perhaps the most encouraging aspect of the exchange program is the support it is receiving from SUU's fraternities and sororities. Some of them may help provide housing for the first exchanges next fall, and they have planned a few days' exchange this month with students from Tougaloo Southern Christian College in Tougaloo, Miss.

Such participation in civil rights efforts by the Greeks is more significant than it might seem on the surface. Fraternity members could, of course, remain lily-white while conducting such exchanges for appearance sake. We are certain that this is not the intent and will not be the result of such a program. The Greeks who are working for the exchange program are sincere in their concern, and the fact that they have extensive support from within their houses shows the way toward the day when fraternities and sororities can be the dynamic organizations they want to be. They probably will not be pledging Negroes with in the next few years — the threat of pressure from national headquarters and from alumni is too formidable. But support of the exchange program shows that there is a new breed of Greek who may soon break the color bars in membership as well as in attitude.

SARE-Friends of SNCC, of course, deserves the credit for initiating and carrying through the exchange program. It was their idea, and it was their work which got the idea onto paper and into reality. Their work on this project is a good example of all their efforts this last semester. They have done the brunt of the detailed work of several projects and often have gotten little of the glory. Their work to make the human rights fight a universal one has been effective.

And the willingness of other campus groups to join them in the battle is a credit to the groups and to the University.

The weaknesses of modern education—

New SUU president on exams, admissions

By HOWARD R. BOWEN
SUU President-Elect

(This is the second of two articles excerpted from an address made by Howard R. Bowen as president of Grinnell College, Sept. 12, 1963, at the fall opening convocation of students and faculty members. He will assume the SUU presidency July 1.)

Our present admissions policy is governed largely by academic aptitude, as measured by so-called objective tests. Despite our genuine efforts to introduce flexibility into our admissions procedures and despite the attention paid to other criteria, the decision whether to admit any student is in fact dominated by three numbers, the scores on the verbal and quantitative College Board tests, and the rank in high school class. Rank in high school class, in turn, is usually determined largely by scores on a large number of objective tests.

So, it is only a slight exaggeration to say that our admissions procedures are based overwhelmingly on a singularly narrow dimension of human ability as the chief criterion for selection of its students. In doing so, it virtually ignores such other important dimensions as curiosity, the need for achievement (defined as the inner desire to do a good job of work), imagination, social sensitivity, initiative, and political ability. I mention these because they are some of the criteria proposed by the distinguished Harvard psychologist, David C. McClelland.

My proposal is quite modest. It is simply that we reserve perhaps 50 places in each freshman class for students who do not fully measure up to our quantitative standards of academic aptitude but show signs of excellence in other dimensions such as those suggested by Prof. McClelland. I suggest that the 50 candidates be selected by a process including the special and detailed recommendation of teachers and careful interviews, in some depth, first with admissions counselors and then with faculty members.

My second proposal, really a series of suggestions, relates to examinations and grades. Objective examinations should be sparingly used in a college like Grinnell. These examinations already have had heavy weight in the evaluation of students. For the sake of balance we should rely largely on other kinds of tests.

The basic assumption in testing a student in any course should be that he is a young apprentice scholar in the field, and that the test is to ascertain his scholarly proficiency. The canons of scholarship should therefore apply to the examination procedure, in the sense that the student should be tested on the things scholars do. These include: formulating hypotheses, gathering data, criticism, synthesis, problem-solving, establishing new relationships, and seeking new insights. The scholar's work requires knowledge of sources and constant access to them, it requires painstaking thought, and it requires exact formulation of ideas. At the conclusion of a study the scholar usually produces a document or oral report indicating where he has been and what he has found.

Scholarly work in this sense is a far cry from the usual examination which imposes a rigid time limit and requires rapid recall, split-second judgments, and hastily composed answers. An examination in the spirit of scholarship requires time to organize ideas, to explore issues and implications, to consult sources, and to compose coherent reports representing one's best thinking and one's best opinion.

My suggestion, of course, is simply that most testing should be in the form of reports prepared without rigid time limit and with full access to note and sources. Only in this way, I think, can students be properly tested on the ability we want them to develop, namely, scholarly ability.

To avoid the multiplicity of deadlines that plague our students and to increase both the students' and the faculty's freedom in the use of time, I suggest that in most courses there be only one examination, namely, a final examination. At present a typical semester course requires two to six examinations, and a typical student, through a four-year college career, takes perhaps 125 different examinations. My proposal would reduce this number to perhaps 30 or 40 — a number which seems to me more than ample to test a student's accomplishments.

The present multiplicity of examinations converts the college career into a kind of game in which the student is constantly preoccupied with getting grades on tests and is seldom confronted with the larger and the more scholarly aspects of a liberal education.

His attention is focused successively on little fragments of the subjects under study as he prepares to meet one after another of the test deadlines. These deadlines for his various courses do not necessarily fall in any logical sequence and are as likely to prevent an orderly sequence of work as to promote it. Moreover, when the tests pile up over a short period, as often happens, the student feels a sense of unbearable pressure.

Perhaps the most serious weakness of the system is that the student is denied the opportunity to learn how to be responsible for scheduling his own time. By a system of strict and on the whole arbitrary deadlines, he is in effect led by his professors, step by step, through his college career. He is being told not only what to do but precisely when to do it. The system seems to me more appropriate for the fifth grade than for a college with a highly selected and strongly motivated student body.

This suggestion would not necessarily be welcomed by all students. Many of them do not like to have their course grades determined by a single examination, they like the security of knowing "how they are getting along" week by week or month by month, and they like to keep up with studies by doing relatively small blocks at a time.

Nevertheless, I feel that the case for reducing the frequency of examinations is overwhelming. I recognize that there may be some fields where frequent examinations are needed. Examples might be modern foreign languages or mathematics. Even here, however, I suspect the need is for frequent drills, not necessarily for examinations which determine course grades.

Next I suggest that in the evaluation of students the relative weight of course grades be reduced and the relative weight of comprehensive examinations be increased.

The purpose of this change would be to heighten the motivation of the student toward the larger objectives of liberal education and toward mastery of a major field, and to reduce his preoccupation with the bits and pieces represented by course grades. It would be good to create an atmosphere at Grinnell in which a student might be encouraged to read books on his own or to make research inquiries that derive from his curiosity rather than to be constantly restricted to formal course assignments.

There are perhaps many ways by which this could be accomplished. One suggestion, which I think worthy of consideration, is that, in computing the student's final grade-point average, the two comprehensive examinations would each be weighted at 25 per cent and the course grades weighted at 50 per cent. This would mean that a substantial value would be placed on a student's progress toward a liberal education (as measured by the Junior Liberal Arts Examination) and toward mastery of his major (as measured by the Senior Comprehensive Examination on the major field), progress of a kind that might have been partly achieved by study outside formal courses. Under this system, both of the comprehensive examinations would need to be strengthened.

The suggestions I have made are of course controversial. By some they will be considered radical. I offer them not as fully developed proposals ready for adoption, but as a basis for discussion of what we must all feel are problems.

I think all these can be done without impairing the position of either the student or the college as measured by the various numbers I referred to earlier. If we move ahead along lines I have suggested, I believe our educational procedures will be more closely adapted to the present character of our students, to our faculty, to our objectives, and to the present needs of higher education in America.

Oedipus' staged well; direction falls short

By EDWARD ERIKSSON
Iowan Reviewer

Last night's University Theater production of Sophocles' Oedipus Rex was staged with a handsome set, attractive costumes, and intelligent lighting, but owing to spurious directing and bombastic acting, the play failed to reach the audience as a work of dramatic art.

When the curtain rose we saw a chalky-gray box-shaped building slanting forward on the right, circular smoking altars on either side, a pale gold statue in the rear center, and a vast background of pink which slowly became red and then pale blue as the drama progressed. Slowly, determined, figures in pastel gray and in black walked forward and across the stage moaning and bearing branches to place on the altars. A voice boomed and we soon discovered that the place was Thebes and the problem at hand was an unshakable plague.

We did not recognize in the building anything particularly Greek. Its squalor resembled sacrificial tables used by pre-historic Mexican Indians. When Creon entered and announced that the city would be relieved when the murderer of Laius, the late king, was rooted out, in his three-pointed, star-like headdress, he could have easily passed for Montezuma.

But the director, John Terfloth, was not attempting to transplant civilizations. The Chorus, in black robes with red sashes, wore caps of 13th century European fashion, and as a whole reminded one of a group of pilgrims of the Middle Ages. The scatters of plague-ridden citizens would have passed the Gin-Lane of Hogarth without notice. The attempt was to render the tragedy of Oedipus as pure human interest devoid of the constricting concomitants of space and time.

As the scenery and costumes, however, bore no palpable relation to the story, neither did the characterizations. The acting in general was histrionic. The masks of Oedipus and Jocasta tended to depersonalize them entirely. A Kent Gravett, as Oedipus, belatedly and meaninglessly through most of the play, it was not until after we saw him with bloody eye-sockets did he begin to deliver his lines with more human punctuation.

Historically, the Greeks used masks to convey character to distant-seated members of the audience.

Perhaps Prof. Terfloth furnished the cast with masks to show that after all the production was of a Greek tragedy.

Confusion worse confounded, the Chorus shouted their lines unintelligibly. But this may have been a note of consistency because at the moment of recitation they had become a company of soldiers; the Leader was a drill sergeant, and led his boys through a number of tricky formations. And to prove that the Chorus had not the slightest relation to the play, at the moment Jocasta was hanging herself, the gentlemen topped off their tour-de-force with a unique Japanese dance routine set to electric music.

The tragedy was lost somewhere in the antics and the shouting. Watching Oedipus the King, a man on the crest of power and pride, suddenly fall because of his insistence on discovering his identity as a patrician and a husband to his mother, evoked no sympathy or awe or any emotion, however vague. A ripple of laughter ran across the house when D. G. Buckles, as the Shepherd, prepared to announce Oedipus' royal Theban birth. Mr. Buckles was not trying to be funny. He was acting realistically, speaking as would an old man feebly attempting to stall Oedipus' doom.

The sharp contrast between his simple purposefulness and the loud, important, and seemingly incomprehensible behavior of the major characters could only be taken a deliberate comedy.

The closest the presentation came to producing cathartic elements was in the making-up of the group of lecherous citizens. They had no business on the stage unless their disgustingly grotesque faces existed to create a general nausea.

In the role of Jocasta, Justine Giannetti looked like Oedipus' daughter instead of his mother and wife. Her flat headress accentuated the difference in height between her and Oedipus; his yellow color, her yellow hair suggested a baffling youthfulness. Successfully, she contorted her lips tragically, but her gesturing was too pompous for stature and her speeches carried no significance.

Lawrence Gordon, as the Chorus Leader, was loud, self-important, but meaningful. A formidable Leader, he managed to convey sense and seriousness in the context of Oedipus' raving and the Chorus' irrelevance.

The character of Creon, brother of Jocasta and joint ruler of Thebes, came through as a personality and not merely a mechanical voice. In the role, Richard Douglass moved with dignified grace and spoke in restrained, self-assured rhythms. As he assumed the rule of Thebes, the control of Oedipus, his accents became crisper, his tones gentler but firmer.

As the blind soothsayer, Tiresias, Yehuda Levy walked haltingly perfect. He convincingly portrayed a cantankerous old buzzard, speaking gruffly and peevishly from the moment he entered. There was no reason, however, for his vindictiveness until Oedipus accused him of plotting to kill the former king. Mr. Levy's consistent attitude belied the impetus of his sudden angry denunciation of Oedipus.

Nicholas Nero, as the messenger who reports Jocasta's death and Oedipus' blinding, was overbearing in his grief and tears.

Jack Ragsdale was casually rustic as the self-seeking messenger. His natural, pointed speech was a breath of fresh air in an atmosphere of stiffness and turpitude.

Prof. Arnott's translation proposes and succeeds in introducing an idiomatic, 20th Century rendering of Oedipus Rex which is mostly free of the bombast of the Elizabethan and falsely constructed phrases so frequent in translations of Greek plays. The grand irony of Thursday's Oedipus Rex was that very few connected with the production realized the difference.

Washington Gets Huff from Giants

WASHINGTON (AP) — Coach Bill McPeak completed his second major deal within 10 days Friday, obtaining Sam Huff from the New York Giants to bolster shaky Washington Redskins linebacking.

The Giants, trying to plug two holes in the defensive line that helped win three straight Eastern Division titles in the National Football League, in exchange received defensive end Andy Stynchula, a 250-pound, four-year veteran.

George Seals, a rookie defensive lineman from the University of Missouri, came along with Huff to the Redskins. The Giants also received halfback Dick James, who led the NFL in punt returns last fall, and a No. 5 draft choice next fall.

But Huff and Stynchula were the key men in the deal.

Just as 10 days ago when he traded quarterback Norman Snead for quarterback Sonny Jurgensen of Philadelphia, McPeak placed major emphasis in getting a solid veteran who can help produce a winning team next fall.

The Redskins coach gave a "win-or-else" edict last fall when his contract was renewed for the fourth year. Washington was 3-11 last fall and hasn't had a winning season since 1955.

Palmer Takes 4-Stroke Lead In Masters

AUGUSTA, Ga. — While Arnie's Army spurred him on by land and air, charged-up Arnold Palmer reeled off birdies on four of the last six holes Friday for a four-under-par 68 which sent him into a commanding four-stroke lead after 36 holes in the Masters Golf Tournament.

Added to his first round 69, the birdie march over Augusta National's sun-soaked 6,980 yards gave the Latrobe, Pa., links idol a total of 137, seven under par, and made him an overwhelming favorite to capture an unprecedented fourth Masters crown.

He also was in position — by duplicating his efforts of the first two days of this spring spectacle — to tie the record of 274 set by Ben Hogan in 1953. Many said it might never be done.

Palmer soared four shots ahead of his closest pursuer, Gary Player of South Africa.

Player, the little Johannesburg precisionist in perennial black garb, had to sink a 25-foot putt on the final hole for a 72 and 141. The rain-munching South African won here in 1961, the first and only foreigner to do it, and lost in a playoff to Palmer in 1962.

Another stroke farther back, five behind Palmer, were slender Don January of Dallas and former U.S. Open champion Gene Littler of La Jolla, Calif., with identical 70-72-142 scores and almost identical grief.

The 24-year-old defending champion Jack Nicklaus, the player designated to succeed Palmer as the No. 1 man in professional golf, bogied three of the last seven holes for a 73 which put him at 144.

Hawks Lose to Western Illinois, 4-2

By CURT SYLVESTER
Staff Writer

Western Illinois' Jim Johnson pitched 10 innings of five-hit baseball and Angie Vallejo lined a two-run single in the top of the tenth inning as the Leathernecks handed Iowa a 4-2 setback Friday afternoon in a game on the Iowa field.

After trailing the first five innings, Western Illinois tied the score in the sixth inning on walks to Johnson and Rick Rakowski, a run-producing single by Ed Brooks, a fielder's choice and another run-scoring single by Dave Ford. The game remained tied, 2-2, until the top of the tenth.

Then Rakowski singled, Ray Duff walked and an out later, Vallejo rifled one of reliever Doug Winder's pitches into center field, scoring the winning runs.

Iowa had taken the lead in the second inning on an unearned run and scored its second run in the fifth when Bill Niedbala and Jim Koehn hit consecutive singles, advanced on Duke Lee's ground out and Ken Banaszek scored Niedbala by hitting into a fielder's choice.

The Hawks threatened to win the game in the ninth inning when Koehn led off with a single to left and Lee got on base via an error. Johnson struck out catcher Jim Freese, however, and then got Banaszek to hit into a double play.

The Hawkeyes put runners on base in every inning except the first and tenth, but Johnson, a tall righthander, was always able to work his way out of trouble, often with the help of sharp defensive play from his infield. In the sixth inning and again in the ninth, Johnson was pulled out of jams by quick

Bob Gehard, the Hawk starter, struck out five men and didn't yield a hit in the first five innings. Control trouble got the big righthander off to a bad start in the sixth. He walked the first two men and then gave up two run-scoring singles while retiring only one hitter. He was relieved by Ron Stroup who walked one man and then got Nick Panos to hit into a double play to end the inning.

Koehn led the Hawk hitting with two singles in three official trips to the plate to raise his average to .311.

Jay Petersen turned in one of the best defensive plays of the day in the eighth inning. With the game tied and the bases loaded with two outs, Nick Panos hit a sharp ground ball down the third base line. Petersen made a diving grab of the ball and kicked third base for a force out to end the inning. The Hawks will meet Western Illinois again at 1 p.m. today in a double-header. Carl Brunst will start the first game and either Bob Schauenberg (1-0) or Steve Green (0-1) will pitch the night-cap.

WSUI Series To Feature 13 Authors

Such famous authors as Arthur Miller, Robert Frost, Pearl Buck, and Carl Sandburg will be featured in a new weekly, 30-minute lecture series which will begin on WSUI Tuesday at 8:30 p.m.

In keeping with the theme of the Shakespeare Sesquicentennial, WSUI will present Macbeth, in opera form, at 7:15 p.m. Friday. Members of the panel are Newton Minnow, former chairman of the FCC; Barry Bingham, editor and publisher of The Courier Journal and the Times of Louisville, Ky.; William Benton, Chairman of the Board of the Encyclopaedia Britannica Company.
