Three bours of silence at the President's news conference Tuesday cut off a question from a reporter who, the President observed, "just wallowed in the mud in an effort to be as unkind as possible." "They are the people who seem to be the only ones who are able to ask the President questions," the President said. "It's a good way to turn the hour into an hour and a half."

The President was responding to questions on the Vietnam situation, but his comments were directed at a question from the newspaperman who, the President said, had made frequent efforts to "devastate" him personally.

The President also repeated his criticism of the United Nations, saying he had called for a worldwide body "that would replace the existing sham that is the United Nations." He called on the House and Senate to override the veto of the United Nations appropriation bill he had signed into law.

The President said he had been "enormously disturbed" by the news from Vietnam and his Administration had been "deeply concerned" by the development. He said he had been told that "terrorist" activities were being stepped up in the wake of the evacuation of American forces from Vietnam.

He said he had spoken to Secretary of State Rusk and Defense Secretary McNamara "on the phone" and had learned that "there had been some indications" of a "major increase in terrorist activities." The President said he had been "very, very disturbed" at the increase in "terrorist" activities.

He added: "It is our belief that this action is being taken by the Viet Cong in an effort to force the United States to withdraw from Vietnam." He said there were "enormous indications" that the Viet Cong had been "preparing for a major offensive." Flag bill is irrational

First it was draft card burning. Now it's flag destruction. The government of the United States is taking the position that the burning of certain pieces of paper or coterie of cloth is worse than justified by just long prison sentences and huge fines to those who do the destroying.

The concern now is with the flag. The U.S. House of Representatives has passed (285-16) a bill to make destruction of the American flag an offense punishable by a $2,000 fine and a year in prison. Support for such legislation was motivated by the burning of flags at a recent demonstration in New York against the Vietnam war.

The issue, of course, is whether there is a war. If there is a war, then certainly the flag and the people who use it are part of the problem. But should we try to understand the people who have an emotional attachment to our country — the type of attachment which in the flag serves as a symbol of association. And should we respect such patriotic attachment despite the fact that we don't share and don't own it? It is important to notice that the Senate has put in on its agenda the possibility of extending this legislation to all American symbols and even to ourselves.

At the same time we should do something else. We can not oppose the passage of any legislation. We can not even oppose the passage of this legislation. We should all be free to support the flag and the people who use it.

What's with you, Texas?

The killings late Wednesday of three people in Lufkin, Texas, and the arrest of a Texas man in connection with them raise questions, says Richard H. Proctor, who asks, what's with you, Texas? Regardless of whether this man is being held in connection with the killings, it would not be improper for him to be held in connection with the killing of himself. It would be improper for him to be held in connection with the killing of himself if he is killed or if he is not killed. It would be improper for him to be held in connection with the killing of himself if he is killed or if he is not killed.
