A LAST-MINUTE CHECK — President Johnson uses the telephone Wednesday afternoon for an information check as he works in his White House office on his State of the Union message. LBJ Plugs For Tax Increase

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Johnson told the nation Wednesday night it faces spiraling prices and "continued erosion of the American dollar" unless Congress increases taxes to help offset planned federal spending of a massive $186 billion.

He pledged unceasing efforts for Vietnam peace but offered no new formula.

Johnson also called for legislation to remove the gold backing for U.S. paper money. At present this ties up 25 cents for each dollar in circulation.

Along with this the President promised that the United States will keep on maintaining the price of gold at $35 an ounce.

Johnson's State of the Union message, delivered before crowded galleries in the House chamber, brought mixed reactions from congressional critics.

Democratic leaders generally hailed it as a masterful statement, while Republicans found points to challenge.

Rep. Frank T. Bow of Ohio, senior Republican on the House Appropriations Committee, said the proposed budget is too high and declared he will offer another bill to impose spending curbs, as he did last year.

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), who has demanded a freeze of most domestic spending programs at their present levels as a price for a tax increase, declined comment pending disclosure of detailed budget figures.

Speaker of the House John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) called the speech "one of the wisest and most practical prescriptions for peace and progress in many years."

Although the spectators' galleries were crowded with standees, not all of the seats of the House members were filled as senators, followed by the diplomatic corps, filled into the chamber.

Sen. Russell B. Long (D-La.), chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, said he remains opposed to the 10 per cent tax surcharge which Johnson reiterated is essential to protect the economy.

"We are not going to act on it in my committee unless the House passes it," Long said. "If I had to vote on it right now, I would vote against it. But I am willing to listen to the arguments."

In his address, broadcast nationally by radio and television, Johnson also urged legislation aimed at private employment of 500,000 hard-core unemployed in three years.

He asked for the launching of a 10-year campaign to build six million housing units for low and middle income families.

He urged steps to improve what he called the shocking infant mortality rate in America.

In addition to prodding Congress to pass consumer legislation still left over from the last session, the chief executive suggested a major study of automobile insurance, "new safeguards to insure the quality of fish and poultry, and the safety of our community water supplies."

These and other proposals will be covered in a budget for the 1969 fiscal year, which starts July 1, that will be up $10.4 billion in spending over the current year.

Revenues will come within $8 billion of providing a balanced budget, and that takes into account the tax bill Johnson is insisting is vital to protect the country against inflation.

There was no backing away from the President's bid for a 10 per cent surtax on incomes of individuals and corporations.

The budget figures are based for the first time on a new unified concept which includes $47 billion in spending from vast trust funds. These are for such things as Social Security, highways and medicare.

Johnson said the economic outlook for this year, if the country is vigilant, is one for steady growth.

"True," he said, "there are some clouds on the horizon. Prices are rising. Interest rates have passed the peak of 1966; and if there is continued inaction on the tax bill, they will climb higher."

"I warn the nation that this failure to act will sweep us into an accelerating spiral of price increases; a slump in home building; and a continuing erosion of the American dollar."

"This would be a tragedy for every American family. And I predict that if it happens they will all let us know about it."

Both at home and abroad, Johnson said, the nation is challenged. But he said it is the national will and not its strength that is being tried, its sense of purpose and not its ability to achieve a better America.

He said that we have the strength to meet every challenge and he believes with an abiding conviction that the American people "have the will to meet the trials these times impose."

Among the trials, of course, is the war in Vietnam. And Johnson said there are marks of progress.

Declaring that aggression never will prevail and the American patience and perseverance will match U.S. power, the President added:

"But our goal is peace — and peace at the earliest possible moment."

Court Dismisses Charge On Riley

The disturbing the peace charge against State Sen. Thomas R. Riley (R-Cedar Rapids), which Riley had himself sought to have thrown out of court, was dismissed Wednesday — at the request of the state.

But Riley told The Daily Iowan that he had hoped for the opportunity to be cleared by a court of law and was disappointed with the dismissal.

Even more disappointed was Jerry Sies, A4, Valley Stream, N.Y., the student who had brought the charge against Riley after making a citizen's arrest Nov. 1 and had fought a losing battle to see the case prosecuted.

Justice of the Peace Carl Goetz dismissed the charge at the request of County Atty. Robert Jansen. The trial of Riley had been scheduled to get under way at the Court House today before a six-member jury.

In his request for dismissal, Jansen noted that the county attorney "reserves the right to decide which cases he intends to prosecute, particularly misdemeanors not filed by police officers and filed by private citizens."

Jansen went on to say that decisions concerning whether or not to prosecute a case "are based on such things as chance of successful prosecution, points of law and amount of time and staff available to prosecute the charge."

While not citing which of those factors led to the decision to drop proceedings against Riley, Jansen added that his office, based on "these factors," had concluded "that further proceedings are unwarranted."

Jansen said he would have no further comment on the Riley-Sies dispute "out of fairness to both parties involved."

Charged On Nov. 1
 The case against Riley stemmed out of events occurring at the scene of the antiwar demonstration directed against campus recruitment by the Marine Corps at the Union Nov. 1. During the early afternoon, Sies made a citizen's arrest on Riley who, Sies said, was inciting the crowd of counter-demonstrators and on-lookers. Riley told reporters after his arrest that he "was at the Union trying to prevent a riot."

The charge against Riley was filed in the Police Court of Judge Marion Neely on Nov. 1, along with similar charges against 167 demonstrators arrested at the Union. The demonstrators were all released on $25 bond; Riley was released on his own recognizance.

Sies subsequently has charged that it was his intention to file an incitement to riot charge against Riley and that he was confused—and his intentions thwarted—by Neely. Sies has charged also that Neely and Riley addressed each other by first names at the time the charge was filed and appeared to be on friendly terms.

Neely is Republican Chairman of Johnson County. Riley is a Linn County Republican and an oft-mentioned gubernatorial possibility.

Riley appeared in court on Nov. 16 for the first time and requested a dismissal. Neely subsequently denied the dismissal and set trial date for Dec. 13. At that time, Riley requested a change of venue (place of trial) to Goetz' court so that he could have a jury trial. Police Court is forbidden to provide jury trials.

Proceedings Delayed
 Last Thursday, with the trial set to begin, proceedings were again delayed when Jansen, who was at that time tied up with the Grand Jury hearings, told Goetz that he would be unavailable. At that time, Sies told the DI that he feared Jansen didn't really want to prosecute Riley and would eventually drop the charges.

Sies said Wednesday that he thought he had a strong case against Riley but that Jansen was "so reluctant to prosecute Riley, a possible candidate for governor, and so very eager to prosecute students whose charges are at best questionable."

He charged that Jansen had not examined photographs or tapes which Sies had made available to him and that Jansen's office had made "no attempt to find witnesses or locate evidence."

Sies said that he had 25 witnesses who had been ready to testify that Riley had been encouraging the counter-demonstrators on Nov. 1 to attack the war protesters and that he had grabbed Karl D. Gleaves, A3, Muscatine — one of the demonstrators — in order to please the crowd and not in a sincere attempt to make a citizen's arrest.

Riley, who claims that he had decided to make a citizen's arrest himself when law enforcement officials failed to act in what seemed to him to be a near riotous situation and chose Gleaves purely by accident, said Wednesday he had witnesses who would testify that he had not injured Gleaves.

It was after Riley gave up his attempt to arrest Gleaves, who went limp and refused to cooperate with Riley, that Sies made his citizen's arrest on Riley, who did cooperate.

Dismissal Disappointing
 In a telephone interview from Cedar Rapids Wednesday night, Riley told the DI he was "disappointed with the dismissal because I wanted an opportunity to have a jury hear the evidence. I am confident they would have had no trouble in deciding the case."

Regarding Sies' insinuations that politics had played a role in the dismissal, Riley said, "As usual, Sies doesn't know what he is talking about, particularly where the law of Iowa is concerned." Riley is a lawyer.

He said that Sies had attempted originally to charge him with "inciting to riot," and noted that there is no statute relating to such a charge in the Iowa Code.

Changes In Core Courses To Go Into Effect In 1969

By MIKE KAUTSCH
 Committee members who study the University's liberal arts requirements share at least one concern.
 "We want to make sure people aren't obsolete as soon as they get out of college," Samuel L. Becker, director of the Television Center, said Tuesday.
 General education ought to help specialized college graduates to cope with and even to lead changes in society, he said.
 Becker was the chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on General Education Requirements in the College of Liberal Arts.
Report Submitted
 The committee recently submitted a report to the Educational Policy Committee, and proposed five changes in the liberal arts program.
 Two proposals already have been accepted by the policy committee, according to Dewey B. Smit, dean of the College of Liberal Arts.
 The proposals will affect core course requirements, beginning in 1969.
 Smit appointed the 13 faculty member Ad Hoc committee in January, 1967, and the committee completed its study in June, 1967.
 The committee's purpose was, according to Becker, to study the philosophy of general education at the University and to propose possible improvements in the liberal arts program.
 Because of the accepted proposals, by 1969-70, present core courses will be moved into the academic departments that have major responsibility for them.

Responsibility Delineated
 They no longer will be grouped into a separate department (number 11). Responsibility for various courses will be clearly delineated.
 And, by 1970-71, it should be possible for students to satisfy the core education requirements, in each of four major areas, with a course or sequence of courses in a single department.
 For example, to satisfy requirements in the Historical and Cultural Studies area, a student will be able to choose a sequence of courses from the Department of Philosophy.
 A third proposal, under study, according to Smit, would group the general education courses in art, music and drama as possible choices with literature rather than with history, philosophy and religion.
 Then, with the arts in one area, students no longer would have to choose between a course emphasizing history and a course emphasizing the analysis of works of art.
4th Proposal Considered
 Smit said the committee had already thought favorably about a fourth proposal, which would add a variety of upper-level general education courses to the curriculum. The courses would attempt to integrate knowledge from several disciplines.
 The fifth proposal consists of several guides for continuing studies of general education. The guides included a review of the balance between the goals of general education and the goals of "preparing individuals for life in changing society."
 Becker said one goal of general education was that students should know methods of thought. They should learn how to frame questions and how to systematically answer them.
 He said goals for individuals in society were special skills.
 The committee's report included questions for future evaluations of the programs, such as: How do today's students differ from those in the past? To what extent have the goals of the program been realized in the changed behavior of the students? What are the attitudes of faculty and students toward the program?

Program Adopted In 1944
 The present basic program of general education in the College of Liberal Arts was adopted by the faculty on April 5, 1944.
 The core program was a major innovation at that time. Each student was required to complete eight credit hours in each of four broad areas: Literature, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences, and Historical and Cultural Areas.
 The program assumed that many students would take no further course work in a subject. Therefore, the courses were to "guide the student toward a master of

Grad Assistants Heavily Support Board Of Inquiry

By MARY ANN McEVoy
 Rhetoric and core literature graduate assistants support, 85 to 3, proposed steps to be taken in the suspension or dismissal of graduate assistants, according to a poll tabulated Wednesday night in Shambaugh Auditorium.
 The proposal calls for a board of inquiry, composed of five members of the department, including two peers, which would hear complaints, other than teaching incompetence, about graduate assistants.
 If the complaint could not be settled and there were cause for investigation, a committee of five teachers, including two peers, would be established to investigate.
 This committee then would have the option of dismissing the instructor, exonerating him or suspending him with or without pay. If the instructor were dismissed, he would be able to appeal to the executive committee of the College of Liberal Arts.
 A committee of six rhetoric and core literature assistants was elected to present the proposals to John C. Gerber, professor and chairman of the Department of English; Richard Lloyd-Jones, director of undergraduate study in the Department of English, and the executive committee of the Rhetoric Program.
 This committee will decide upon the next step toward getting their proposals adopted as official University policy after conferring with Gerber, Jones and the executive committee.

Seydel Convicted On Drug Charge

By LINDA ARTLIP
 Donald M. Seydel, 19, of rural West Branch, was found guilty of possession of narcotics Wednesday in Johnson County District Court.
 The verdict was delivered at 1:30 p.m. after deliberation by the jury for 3½ hours.
 Judge Clair E. Hamilton set Feb. 16 for sentencing.
 Seydel's $3,900 bail was continued for 30 days to allow him to file a motion for a new trial. Neither Seydel nor his attorney, Edward Norton of Chicago, would say whether or not an appeal would be filed. It was believed, however, that Seydel would appeal.
 Seydel and two other youths — Richard J. Roehlk, A2, and Walter E. Kellison Jr., A1, both of Cedar Rapids — were arrested in an apartment at 109½ S. Clinton St. on Sept. 22. All three were charged with possession of narcotics after arresting officers said 93 grams of marijuana were found in the apartment.
 The three youths are being tried separately. County Atty. Robert Jansen, who acted as prosecutor in the Seydel case, said earlier in the week that Roehlk and Kellison would be brought to trial sometime in February.
 During the three-day trial, which opened Monday, the defense contended that Seydel was merely a visitor in the apartment, was there on the night of Sept. 22 purely by coincidence and knew nothing of the alleged presence of marijuana.
 Possession of narcotics is a felony in Iowa and is punishable by fines of not more than $2,000 and a prison sentence of two to five years.

Poll In Iowa City Indicates Voters Favor Escalation

By SUE VAN HUIL
 A poll, conducted by the Citizens Committee Against the War in Vietnam, has shown that a plurality of the registered voters in Iowa City favor an increase in U.S. military effort in Vietnam.
 The results of the poll were revealed at a committee meeting Wednesday night.
 Of those questioned, 46 per cent favored an increase in military effort, 44 per cent favored a decrease and 10 per cent approved the continuation of the present situation.
 Voters were canvassed by telephone. They were asked questions concerning the war in Vietnam and the 1968 presidential election.
 Results of the election questions showed that voters would prefer Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York to President Johnson but would select Johnson over Gov. Ronald Reagan of California.
 When results were divided along party lines, Democrats selected Johnson as their first choice as candidate in 1968, followed by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D-N.Y.) and then Sen. Eugene McCarthy (D-Minn.).
 The Republicans chose Rockefeller, followed by former Vice President Richard Nixon, Reagan, Michigan Gov. George Romney and Illinois Sen. Charles Percy.
 Other matters discussed at the meeting, held in the Wesley House, included radio advertisements against the war which have been placed on KWVL in Waterloo.
 The committee also decided to place placards on local buses stating antiwar viewpoints of men such as former President Dwight D. Eisenhower. If this plan is successful, it would be expanded to include the transit facilities of Cedar Rapids and other cities.

Guatemalan Assassins Hunted; Strike Again

GUATEMALA (AP) — Police made large numbers of arrests Wednesday in the hunt for the assassins of two U.S. military officers. But terrorist machine-gunned a wealthy landowner to death in a continuing wave of violence.
 The farmer, Alfonso Alejos de la Cerda, 77, was cut down in his car in a residential suburb of the capital. His driver was wounded.
 The Americans were slain Tuesday by machine-gun fire from a speeding car. Alejos was an uncle of Roberto Alejos, a presidential hopeful in 1962-63.

REFUSES INDUCTION — Dave Harris, former Stanford University student body president, tells newsmen and a crowd gathered at the Oakland Army Induction Center Wednesday, that he refuses to be drafted. An estimated 300 anti-draft demonstrators cheered as Harris tore up what he said were his induction papers. Afterwards, Harris and the demonstrators adjourned to nearby Berkeley for a rally. There were no arrests and no efforts were made by the demonstrators to stop inductees from entering the building.

the leading ideas, the significant facts, the habits of thought and methods of work in several fields." The courses were to be introductory and often the joint responsibility of two or more departments. But continuity of materials was hard to achieve, and several courses were combined or dropped. The recent report from the Ad Hoc committee stated concern that the core program still did not adequately help "students integrate the major disciplines and ideas and values" learned before college. Frequent studies of the program have been made since 1944. In 1948 and 1950, studies attempted to discover student reactions to the core program. For the most part, students approved of the program, although a sizeable number suggested a choice between departmental and core courses. Another study in the 1950's found that students who had taken work in the core courses did consistently better in tests for broad knowledge than did students who had taken roughly an equal number of hours of departmental courses. Committee Reported The Ad Hoc committee reported a belief that core courses could be designed to introduce students to a specific discipline and to instruct student in an area, even though they may not continue in it. The committee proposed continual examination of society's and students' needs. "We would like to see the University as a community of scholars," Becker said, "helping people to cope with an environment that's constantly changing."

Government test results should be made public

One of the biggest consumers of many consumer products is the federal government. Billions of dollars are spent annually by it on thousands of different products.

In most cases, the government runs tests on the various different brands of each product to find which ones serve their purposes most efficiently. More than 30 government agencies test various products to help them in purchasing.

Yet none of this information is made available to the public. The reason usually given for not releasing this information is that the tests are not always complete in what characteristics are evaluated and what different brands are studied.

It is difficult to accept this as the real reason. But even if it were, it does not seem valid. Such information is gathered at the expense of the public and it should be made available for public use.

A House government operations subcommittee is studying the matter to see whether there might be some dissemination of the product-testing data. One of the suggestions made is that the data be made available but without the use of brand names. Also suggested are tags attached to tested articles listing the results of the tests.

The government, of course, has an obligation to see that it does not mislead the public. Thus, if reports were made available about the testing, it would be necessary to see that the full information about what tests were performed on what products be included with the results. Dissemination of all the information, then, would be a good step toward complete fairness.

Also being talked about is the possible use of public service advertising via the mass media to "guide" consumers to rational purchases. The next step after this might be a government consumer-interest agency buying advertising. Both of these possibilities should be avoided, however, until complete testing of all brands is done. And then cautions must be devised to assure the accuracy and impartiality of such tests.

Yet the necessity of such things is not too far away. As the powers of advertising to persuade without rational basis are further developed, something may be necessary to impede the irrationality. Right now making available complete information about the current tests is desirable. — Bill Neubrough

The Garden of Opinion Last reflections

by Rick Garr

"Last Reflections on a War," Bernard B. Fall's last comments on Vietnam compiled by his widow, Dorothy Fall. Doubleday and Company, New York, 1967, 288 pages, $5.

As an analyst of American involvement in Vietnam, Bernard B. Fall had many excellent qualifications.

For example, he was a professional historian; his doctoral dissertation was about the Viet-Minh guerrillas.

He was a top journalist and brilliant writer, with a trained eye for selective observation of fast-moving events.

And, he fluently spoke French, English and Vietnamese, all without a trace of an accent.

He was reared in France, participated in the Resistance during the German occupation and settled in the United States in the 50s.

He began to study Indochina (Vietnam's name before the 1954 split) while it was still a French colony. He had made five observation trips there and was on his sixth last February.

There, while accompanying American Marines on a sweep in the South Vietnam countryside, he was ripped apart by a Viet Cong booby trap.

The author of six major books on Vietnam was gone. A priceless pair of eyes for all the "old" to look at the war were forever closed.

But, there is one last voice from the grave. "Last Reflections on a War," a collection of Fall's published and unpublished articles, lectures, a radio interview transcript and a transcript of the tape of his final day in the jungle, was compiled by his widow as a final tribute to her husband and as an outlet for his final say about the war.

These last comments, coming at this period in American life when the Vietnam issue is uppermost in most minds, should be required reading for anyone who wants to discuss the subject.

"Last Reflections" gives descriptive pictures of both North and South Vietnam. It summarizes 2,000 years of Vietnamese warfare. It looks at our involvement in the present conflict and attempts to put the war into a more international perspective than is usually given in American media.

Fall, unlike any other correspondent of recent years, puts major emphasis on the relationship of the war and Asian nationalism as a whole, and, as factors in his war go, he probably could not be blamed for overemphasis.

As a significant contribution to the national debate, "Last Reflections" can offer several valuable bits of evidence.

For example, it spells out why there was guerrilla war in South Vietnam from 1954-1969 before the creation of the National Liberation Front, and, supposedly, the Viet Cong. Fall explains who the combatants were, why they were fighting, and why the nature of the conflict changed when North Vietnam began to exploit it.

Former U.S. Ambassador to Saigon Henry Cabot Lodge is skillfully knifed to shreds by the searing Fall pen in the chapter on Vietnam's 12 elections. In 1964, Lodge said that in their whole history the Vietnamese had "never had elections on a national basis and a national question" to blow up the significance of the election of the Constituent Assembly.

One-by-one, Fall lists and explains 12 separate instances when, since 1953, the Vietnamese had gone to the polls. And here, he writes, is the heart of the present problem.

"The South Vietnamese no longer even know what is expected of them," he says; "or, rather, who expects what from them. If they were to believe voices heard in Washington, nothing would please anyone more than if the good South Vietnamese would vote themselves a government which would ask for an end to the war; call for direct talks with the Viet Cong; and request a gradual departure of American troops to be replaced (optimally) with the Southeast Asian equivalent of an Inter-American Peace Force; or (minimally) would at least keep the 'Yankee Go Home!' signs off the walls until the last GI has reembarcked."

"Last Reflections" covers virtually every aspect of the war: the Peking-Moscow-Hanoi triangle, the false comparison with Korea, North Vietnamese thoughts on negotiations, and American Vietnam policy since 1940.

As history, "Last Reflections" is limited but well written, and as a source of timely, valuable, untainted information on a volatile issue it is unmatched at the moment.

Its most noticeable flaw is the fact that because the articles were not intended to be one work there are a few duplications of incidents and anecdotes. These pose only a minor annoyance, however, to the flow of the book.

The worst part of the book is the end. The oracle is gone. He has spoken his last. Bernard Fall will be missed.

Non-review reviews non-book in non-paper

By MARY CLARK
"Nobody Loves a Drunken Indian," by Clair Huffaker. David McKay Co. Inc., New York, 1967, 278 pages, $4.95. Available at Iowa Book & Supply Co.

This review is a figment of your imagination. There is no review in this paper. There is no book to tell you about. The author told me that the book does not exist. But I didn't believe him.

Any more than you believed me just now, or if I told you that you were not reading these words; there are no words. There is no newspaper in your hands.

Sounds a little absurd doesn't it? But that is Clair Huffaker's way of telling you what he wants to get across. He tells you something doesn't exist because he wants you to know that it does.

His book, "Nobody Loves a Drunken Indian," the story of a modern tribe's fight for dignity and recognition, opens with this paragraph:

"The characters in this book are totally fictitious. There is no such thing as a Paiute reservation near Phoenix. There is no such thing as a Paiute reservation. There is no Phoenix. There is no such thing as inequality or racial prejudice. And there is no book in your hands."

Huffaker tells us that the Indians aren't poor. They don't die from lack of proper medical care. They are grateful to the generous American people. We have given them so much.

This feeling that you are being fed a line pervades Huffaker's entire book and his technique is most effective and disturbing, indirect and yet direct.

The book is sad and yet supposedly hilarious, a ribald and yet an innocent story of a small Paiute tribe that literally goes on the war path to fight for their rights.

Huffaker is a master of satire, poking fun at the Americans for their treatment of their "red brothers" and throwing all our dirty tricks back in our faces.

Our reliance on legal tricks to get out of keeping promises is blown up by a little old Indian, Wounded Bear Mr. Smith, who has spent his life collecting all the old Indian-white man documents and pops up with one every time to prove that the Indians are right in their escapades. His help is often needed as the Indians get into trouble moving burial grounds, sending smoke signals via sky-writing airplanes and galloping (some galloped in Ford pickups) into Phoenix to capture the town.

Their "war" is led by Flapping Eagle and chronicled by Eleven Snowflake, the "Ernie Pyle of the Paiutes." Snowflake, in telling the story from the Indian's side, successfully drags you into their plight and has you cheering for the Indians.

The book is supposed to be a comedy but often I would say that Huffaker's attempts at humor were gross perversion and distasteful exploitation of sex. I'm not saying that sex can't be funny if it's handled with good taste but Huffaker has thrown away his etiquette book.

The story is not fast moving and I often found myself wondering whether it was worth the time. If Huffaker meant it to be a comedy then he's done a tragic job. If you can overlook his weak attempts at humor, the book can be a warm story with characters who could never exist but whom you wish could.

The book will never be ranked with the classics although it does have a message for those able to wade through the quagmire. At times I thought I was reading one of those books which the police vice-squads usually tear from the shelf during a "let's protect our innocent children" raid at the local smoke shop.

But the smoke shops do a thriving business so maybe there is something to it. Huffaker at least gives us something else to think about besides the bomb, Black Power or whether Johnny's teeth will grow in straight.

'The Comedians' half a success

By NICHOLAS MEYER

"The Comedians," with a screenplay by Graham Greene from his own book of the same name, is a movie which sets out to accomplish two very separate tasks. When I say it is half a success, I mean that it fulfills one of its aims. Greene is a writer of exceptional talent and at least two of his screenplays ("The 3rd Man" and "Our Man in Havana," both directed by Sir Carol Reed) have made tremendously successful films. If "The Comedians" is not of the same calibre, it may partly be due to Peter Glenville's stately direction, which, as it did in "Becket," tends to keep things looking beautiful, but moving at a snail's pace. One gets the feeling that Sir Carol did not indulge long-windedness in Greene as Glenville seems to have done.

The first aim of "The Comedians" is a very familiar and very difficult one, namely showing people, caught in one relatively confining place, exposing themselves under pressures both internal and external. The place is Haiti, and the characters include an impoverished hotel owner (Richard Burton), the British Ambassador (Peter Ustinov), his wife (Elizabeth Taylor), a visiting English Major (Alec Guinness), and two American tourists — the 1948 Vegetarian candidate for the presidency and his wife — (Paul Ford and Lillian Gish). With the exception of Alec Guinness and Peter Ustinov, and a bit of Richard Burton, this presentation of people in trouble is rather incredible. When it isn't incredible, it is banal. Elizabeth Taylor begins by speaking in an atrocious French accent, and some scenes later I learn that she is supposed to be of German origin. At times her accent disappears altogether, all of which is distracting to the rest of the performance. She is having an affair with Burton, who does slightly better as her neurotic lover. Ustinov as her husband is excellent in a difficult but basically well-written part. He underplays nicely and carries conviction.

By contrast, Paul Ford and Lillian Gish are total caricatures. They resemble the Road Runner bird of the cartoon series in that no matter what horror they witness or are involved in, the next scene finds them completely unaffected and as clichedly naive as they were before, in the best stereotyped tradition of ignorant American tourists.

The film's prize however — and it is a prize which alone makes the film worth seeing — is the performance by Sir Alec Guinness as an English Major who is more and less than he appears to be. Guinness in a quieter way is just as great — and perhaps even greater for his quietness — as Sir Laurence Olivier. His performance is complete unto itself, and no matter how trivial or unbelievable everything may be around him, he carries not only conviction but manages to move as well as to convince the viewer. It is the most subtle part in the film and the best written, and Sir Alec makes the most of it. For his work, if nothing else, "The Comedians" becomes memorable.

The second task Greene and Glenville have assigned themselves is the making of a full color expose about Haiti. Graham Greene, so long preoccupied with hell on earth, seems at last to have found it in "Papa Doc" Duvalier's Black Power state, and the film comes frighteningly alive as it forthrightly sets out to examine tyranny. Needless to say the picture could not be made in Haiti, although Duvalier would probably have welcomed the business. Filmed with painstaking accuracy in the French Riviera and in Africa, the cast includes a multitude of talented Negro actors, even the smallest bit player being better in my opinion than the celebrated Mr. Poitier. James Earl Jones — who did a splendid "Othello" four years ago in Central Park — plays a vicious and efficient police chief, and although he doesn't get much more to do than be malevolent, he is so good at it that it's hard to complain.

Here and there, as with the writing of the Paul Ford-Lillian Gish parts, there are some slips. At one point, traveling over a bumpy dirt road, Ford remarks that "something will have to be done about these roads," to which Burton ironically replies: "This is the finest road in all Haiti." Well and good, but later on in the film, we see him driving a considerable distance on a perfectly paved highway. I think I'm quibbling. "The Comedians" is (or should I say are?) a half hour too long and there are many scenes which could have been deleted with no loss to the film's effectiveness. Burton and Gish are nothing special and there are no love scenes that sizzle the screen. Alec Guinness is splendid and Haiti is awful.

1985 De facto censorship

by Paul Kleinberger

There are two ways to shut up a speaker expressing unpopular ideas. One is to drag him away to jail. The other is simply to make noise.

Friday's column included an example of how an honest business establishment, simply by following respectable business practices, might be responsible for de facto censorship in the University. That is a small piece of a big problem, one which America must deal with if it is to be truly democratic.

Another piece: The Vietnam Courier, published in Hanoi, translated into English and French and distributed around the world, gives a weekly report of the war which differs widely from that of the American press. Try to buy a copy in Iowa City.

Once you've tried, do not immediately jump to the conclusion that the evil capitalists are conspiring to keep the truth from the American public. There is undoubtedly a bit of that on up the line, but the local scene is simpler. Lubins doesn't sell the Vietnam Courier probably just because Lubins wouldn't stand to make much money on it if it did.

Iowans read and believe the Des Moines Register partly because the fundamental economic and social structures of this country combine (willfully or otherwise) to prevent anything which looks substantially different from the Register from being available to them. Americans proudly proclaim that our country is free of censorship (other than "moral"), and people occasionally point out to me that in many places a column like this could never be published. That's true, and I'm happy to be here instead of there, but if "publishing" meant not just getting the words on paper but getting the ideas to where they can be considered by the mass of the people, then such columns can't be "published" in America. Nor can most of the writings of the New Left, or the National Liberation Front, or for that matter the American Nazi Party. If the people of Iowa want to find out what I'm about, or the demonstrators, or the counter-demonstrators, they read Flansburg and the Associated Press.

I don't know whose "fault" it is. I'd point partly to economic structures of the sort which might have kept Middle Earth from being sold in the Union because it wouldn't bring in much money. But I'd point also to a systematic approach to education which does nothing to encourage people to gather evidence and make their own decisions. Newspapers which consistently discourage readers from attempting to relate events to their causes (like reporting in detail which members of whose cabinet just resigned, but not telling why they resigned.) Advertising which teaches people to react to superficialities, and to ignore their own impulses, as a way of life. Television which teaches a simplistic notion of the world. Advertisers who capitalize on the simplistic thinking of viewers, while contributing to it with simplistic advertising. TV stations paid by soap companies, and soap companies choosing the programs which form public taste.

Here is the other side of that coin: After the Register announced to the world that Middle Earth was somehow responsible for the Dec. 5 demonstration, two of ME's rare advertisers dropped their ads. They were sad, sympathetic, but decided. They were afraid of "losing business." Economic pressure can be as effective (and so much cleaner) than jails and guns.

In the University, as in the United States, merely removing obvious legal obstacles to the free circulation of ideas is only half the job. Why didn't the Union go looking for Middle Earth?

Negro Jews Flee To Africa For New Life

GBATALA, Liberia (AP) — clearing hacked out of the central Liberian forest, a wary group of Negro Jews that America's racial struggle is trying to create a new life in a public founded by freed African slaves.

They call themselves Hebrews and most of them are from Chicago. When Carter, one of the settlers, started arriving last July, "We'd rather live in the jungles of Africa than in a house in New York."

They bought a 300-acre plot November about 100 miles from Monrovia, the Liberian capital near where the former American slaves settled in 1820. Their settlement has disturbed the American Embassy and Liberian government. The embassy worries that the colony might become a source of American propaganda; Liberia is concerned that other American Negroes might immigrate to cause an assimilation problem in the country of just over one million population.

The pioneers seem to find a difficult time making a new life in the isolated area served only by a farm-to-market road. They refused to discuss their life with a white newsmen.

There are 162 persons in the settlement, including two babies born in Liberia. A few members of the original group have returned to the United States. Most live in a town of about 100 blue and green camper tents on raised floors of logs, and covered by thatched roofs.

The immigrants have adopted a form of Judaism. Carter, who had returned to the United States to recruit more settlers, changed his name to Ben Amram. When a white visitor arrived the settlers said they could make no statements without their leader's consent.

SPAIN'S TOURISM UP — MADRID (AP) — Spain was hoping to attract 17,858,555 tourists last year, 3.5 per cent more than in 1966. The minister of information and tourism, Manuel Fraga Iribarne, reported. The 1966 tourist total was 7,251,746.

Orchestra Unique, Conductor Says

By CINDY HOWELL
The University Symphony Orchestra, which will present its third concert of the season Tuesday night, is unique for its longevity and for premiering new works, according to James Dixon, associate professor of music and orchestra conductor. The orchestra received its impetus in 1921 from Frank Kendrie, who was formerly a member of the St. Louis Symphony. At that time the orchestra averaged 30 members and presented one concert annually.

In 1936 the orchestra was taken over by Philip Greeley Clapp. Under his direction it became the first college orchestra to play the works of Mahler and Bruckner. According to Dixon, it is a tribute to Clapp that he played these works years before they were caught on with the public. Four of the orchestra's Bruckner concerts were broadcast by nationwide radio networks. In 1940 New York's Bruckner Society awarded Clapp the Bruckner Medal, which had also been given to Bruno Walter, Stokowski and Toscanini.

Festival Initiated
After Dixon became conductor in 1954, an annual festival was initiated and each year a well-known composer was invited to a concert consisting completely of his works. Participating composers have been William Schuman, president of Lincoln Center, Samuel Barber, Aaron Copeland, Wallingford Riegger, Peter Menin, Gunther Schuller and Halsey Stevens. The festival this May will be devoted to the works of Mel Powell.

In 1966 critic Michael Steinberg used the orchestra to illustrate his contention that the East and West coasts could no longer consider themselves the only centers of music in the country. Dixon said that besides playing the standard symphonic works, the orchestra performs a service to creative talent by premiering recent works which probably would not be played by a professional orchestra. He said the University was one of the few places where a student composer could hear his works performed.

Members Get Credit
The students in the orchestra receive one semester hour credit. Membership is also open to Iowa City residents. Five concerts are presented yearly, and the orchestra joins the oratorio chorus to present Christmas and Easter concerts. Dixon said programs were chosen to provide a balance of the styles of the last 250 years and to provide a learning experience by presenting selections which would show the relationship between the old and the new.

At Tuesday's concert the orchestra will perform Schubert's Symphony No. 8 in B Minor. Called the "Unfinished Symphony," it was written in 1822 and not discovered until 43 years after the composer's death. Also on the program is Weber's Six Pieces for Orchestra, Op. 6, finished in 1828 and dedicated to Arnold Schoenberg. The final work on the program is Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Violoncello in A minor, Op. 102.

Pay, Profits, Up In Britain, To Be Taxed

LONDON — Chancellor of the Exchequer Roy Jenkins told Britons Wednesday runway wages and profits would be taxed away by the government lest they imperil the benefits of Britain's devaluation of the pound. "The faster money incomes increase, the harsher must be the tax increases," Jenkins told the House of Commons at the start of a two-day debate on the government's economy package ushering a shift in Britain's world role and its welfare state.

The threat of tax increases followed the swing of the economy ax by Prime Minister Harold Wilson. Jenkins said the two must go together to keep the economy in balance so it could concentrate on exports. He predicted harsh taxes in any event, no matter how "unpopular and unpleasant."

His sobering speech restored calm to London's financial district. The financial community, now deeply suspicious of the Labor government, had thought the spending cuts announced by Wilson would be all — and that they would not be enough.

There was some criticism from British financial commentators that the new taxes should have been announced with the spending cuts.

Jenkins responded to this somewhat by moving forward the annual budget and tax message from April to March 19. But he still refused to detail the tax increases in advance. They are expected to be concentrated on consumer goods to soak up purchasing power that could otherwise distract industry from the main task of exporting.

Government informants explained the delay by the need to assess the effect of the budget cuts on the economy.

'Miracle' Happens In Midst Of Rubble In Sicilian Town

GIBELLINA, Sicily — A black and white hound drew attention to a heap of rubble. The dog looked lean from hunger and thirst and kept whining, but he wouldn't quit his guard post. When firemen dug into the heap they found a curly-haired seven-year-old girl. At first she seemed dead.

Then when a fireman lifted her into his arms her hands clenched slowly into fists and her eyes opened. Her lips twitched into a bewildered smile.

This took place 50 hours after the earthquake had turned Gibellina's main street into ruin. As he walked off with the girl in his arms, the fireman broke into tears.

"A miracle," another fireman said. "It almost seems like a miracle."

Other Children Missing
But then a man plodded by crying hoarsely, "Roberto, Roberto." His child was still missing.

Beyond, from rows of hastily pitched white tents on the outskirts of a town that is no more, there rose and fell the anguished lament that is so much a part of Sicily — the voices of the women kneeling for the dead.

This was the scene of desolation in this farm and vineyard country town of 6,410 population on the sulphur-bearing hills sloping up to Mt. Pergola after the disastrous earthquake Monday which laid waste to a triangle-shaped area of western Sicily. Gibellina with probably 100 dead and nearby Montevago with 200 dead were the hardest hit. Every building in both towns was ruined when the tremors struck between midnight and dawn.

Scores still are missing in both towns, perhaps dead beneath the rock and cinderblock wreckage of their homes. But there still was a thin thread of hope. The case of the curly haired girl proved that.

There were other cases. The day before rescuers had found 103-year-old Giuseppina Impastato still alive in her crushed wheelchair.

James Malcolm Williams, who described himself as a prominent midwestern constitutional attorney and former Republican candidate for the Senate, disclaimed any political motivation for his campaign.

"The threat of impeachment is small punishment indeed for the President's inhumanity, his megalomania and his ridiculous assumption of omniscience as to what governments are right or wrong for other nations," Williams said.

He described the President as a "usurper who has forced the youth of this nation to commit horrible, bizarre acts of inhumanity against the people of Vietnam."

Williams characterized this as an "outrageous usurpation that constitutes an obnoxious high crime and misdemeanor" since it has violated universal standards of criminal behavior including murder, arson, willful destruction of property.

Alcindor's Status Doubtful

LOS ANGELES (AP)—All-American Lew Alcindor of UCLA's No. 1-ranked basketball team was released from the university's eye clinic Wednesday, but remained uncertain whether he would play against second-ranked Houston in Texas Saturday night.

The same uncertainty applies to the Bruins' nonconference tilt at UCLA Thursday night with the University of Portland.

The 7-foot-plus junior checked out of the Jules Stein Eye Clinic and, wearing a patch over his injured right eye, attended an 11 a.m. class.

"Coach John Wooden said he didn't know if Alcindor would play in either game," said Vic Kelley, director of the athletic news service at UCLA.

Alcindor suffered the eye injury in a game with California's Bears at Berkeley Friday night during a rebound play with the Bears' 6-5 forward, Tom Henderson.

Wooden said UCLA game films showed that Henderson accidentally jammed Alcindor's eye. Cal's coach, Rene Herreras, said their films indicated the injury was self-inflicted.

The Bruins' big game of the week, if not the year, is the one to be nationally televised from Houston's Astrodome.

Wooden's team will be seeking its 47th consecutive triumph Thursday night.

Athletic World Gets Dose Of Olympic Fever Again

By MIKE EBBING

Olympic fever strikes once every four years. Thousands of coaches, athletes and sports enthusiasts succumb to it.

The scene of the summer Olympics this year is Mexico City, and for many U.S. athletes, the winter months have been filled with feverish last-minute preparations for the Olympic trials.

One event which the U.S. has dominated since the beginning of the games has been the swimming and diving competition. If this trend continues, the U.S. should again be the favorite contender, according to Bob Allen, Iowa's head swimming coach.

Allen, a star breaststroker at Iowa from 1936-38, is in his 10th year as Iowa's swim coach. He was a member of Iowa's only Big 10 championship swimming team in 1936. He was also on the 300-yard medley team which set an NCAA record in 1938.

Teams Win 33
Allen's teams have won 33 and lost 39 meets and have finished fifth twice in the Big 10 and sixth once. Nine of the 11 Iowa swimming records in standard dual meet competition have been broken by athletes under Allen's direction.

The U.S. domination of this event dates back to 1920. Outstanding among the U.S. accomplishments have been strong showings in the 100-meter freestyle, the 100-meter backstroke, the 200-meter butterfly and the 800-meter relay. U.S. divers are also frequent gold medal winners in the springboard and platform diving competition. Since 1920, they have completely dominated springboard diving.

"The reason," said Allen, "has been due to the success of age-group swimming and to the rise of year-round indoor pools."

Each summer, the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) sponsors a program for those interested in swimming from ages six on up. "These programs provide daily competition, geared especially for younger people who don't have to work. Many of these young athletes provide material for the junior and senior high schools."

Allen said that because of such programs, there were more high school Olympic participants in swimming than any other sport. A representative sample however, also comes from colleges and universities.

3-Letter Men Absent
"The main difference," said Allen, "between high school and college athletics is the absence of the three-letter man in college."

"All collegiate sports, swimming included, entail year-around preparation."

Allen said that in the fall he usually concentrated on strength and flexibility exercises and running.

"More muscles are probably used in swimming than any other sport."

Watson, Lee Quit— 2 Coaches Leave UI Football Staff

By MIKE BARRY
Sports Editor

Two members of the football coaching staff — defensive line coach Bob Watson and defensive secondary coach Gordon Lee — announced their resignations from the staff Wednesday.

Announcement of the resignations was made public at 1:30 p.m. in a written release from the Iowa Sports Information Service. The resignations will become effective either later this month or around the middle of February. This decision has not yet been made.

Both coaches came to Iowa from the University of Utah when Ray Nagel succeeded Jerry Burns as head coach of the Hawkeyes Dec. 11, 1965. The two served under Nagel as assistant coaches at Utah.

Watson was a teammate of Nagel's at UCLA. Lee played halfback for Nagel at Utah for three years, 1959, 60, 61.

The resignations lent credence to several months of quiet speculation by many Hawkeye fans that one, and possibly two football coaching changes would be made shortly after the football season. Watson's name was often mentioned amid the rumors.

A source close to the Department of Athletics intimated after Iowa's last game of the season here with Illinois that two changes in the staff would be made. It was mentioned that if Watson would be asked to quit.

Defense Criticized
Iowa's defense drew criticism from fans and athletic administrators alike this past season. The Hawkeyes gave up yardage and points often at alarming rates. They ranked 10th in overall Big 10 Conference defensive statistics in tying Wisconsin for the cellar.

The defensive unit yielded 24.9 points per game, most in the conference; gave up the most net yards per game, 368.4; the most rushing, 243.1; and tied for fourth in average number of first downs allowed, 18.1.

The Hawks gave up an average of 125.3 yards passing per game in the conference. And at one time, ranked 112th out of 113 major college defensive units in the country.

Watson and Lee are the second and third members of Nagel's original staff here to resign. Offensive line coach Dick Mansperger quit a year ago to join the NFL's Dallas Cowboys as director of player personnel.

Watson Is Veteran
Watson is a veteran coach with a reputation for developing rugged linemen. He was Nagel's No. 1 assistant. He has been coaching major college football since 1955 and offers a background built on winners.

His first eight years of coaching were spent with Tommy Prothro at Oregon State, and after the 1962 season, he joined longtime friend Nagel at Utah.

Watson played fullback, wingback and end at UCLA. In 1949 he was an all-Pacific Coast wingback. In 1950 he captained the Bruin football team. He was graduated from the school in 1951 with a bachelor's degree in business.

"As a player and as a coach," said Watson Wednesday night, "I've never been any place where we lost for two successive years. This is my first experience with two successive losing seasons in football."

When asked if he thought that he would be fired had he not decided to quit, Watson replied: "I'd rather not answer the question."

Watson said that he did not have "any concrete plans for the future" and that he did have "interests in other aspects of coaching." He is investigating some professional coaching possibilities.

Watson applied for head coaching jobs at Iowa State and Idaho universities, but as he put it, "finished second. After two losing seasons here, opportunities are scarce. It's hard to erase the stigma of losing..."

Lee earned a bachelor of science degree in physical education from the University of Utah in 1962. During his senior year, he was named captain of the football team. He was also named to the Western Athletic Conference all-academic team.

Lee Coaches Freshmen
In 1962 Lee served as freshman football coach at the school. He spent the 1963 season as an assistant football coach at American River Junior College in Sacramento, Calif. Then it was back to Utah for two seasons as offensive backfield coach.

"It was our decision," commented Lee in reference to both resignations. "I've been thinking about it for quite a while. I've enjoyed coaching, but I don't know if I want to stay in it for a career."

"I've received a very good business opportunity. So I decided to get out of coaching."

Lee said that he was planning to go to work for Horace Mann Insurance Company in Salt Lake City, Utah.

"I was pretty satisfied with the performance of the defensive secondary," he said, "especially Steve Wilson. He improved each week and became a fine football player."

One new coach has already been named to the staff. He's Gary Grouwinkel, offensive line coach. Wayne Fontes, presently at the University of Dayton, will come to Iowa City Friday for an interview for the defensive backfield coaching job.

Grouwinkel was a letterman guard on Iowa football teams of 1956, 57 and 58. He is giving up an assistant's post at the University of Arizona. Grouwinkel also coached two seasons at the University of North Dakota, and prior to that, was a high school coach at West Branch and Ottumwa.

He was a reserve guard on the 1956 and 57 teams and a regular in 1958 when Iowa won the Big 10 title and Rose Bowl game. Grouwinkel, now 31, came to Iowa from Columbus, Jct.

Fontes, a graduate of Michigan State University and a letterman there in 1960 and 61, has been a defensive coach at the University of Dayton for the past two years. He played professionally with the New York Jets and Philadelphia Eagles and coached high school ball for one year.

Offensive coach Dick Tambur will now coach defense.

'Αρχή δέ τοι ἤμισυ παντός * - Pythagoras

When Pythagoras said "The beginning is half of the whole" he uttered wise words indeed. But, if you'll pardon a slight paraphrase, the proper beginning might well be more than half the whole.

You well know this is a fast moving, fast changing world. Just any beginning won't do today because if it's the wrong one, too much time is lost in retracing steps; in starting over on the right track.

You'll just never catch up. We think we offer you the best way to begin your career. It will involve more time after you graduate. It will involve more expense. It will be well worth both because it will help assure your rapid advancement, best possible earnings, and continued personal challenge and growth regardless of the field you choose.

Here's why we can make such a dramatic statement. According to the American Council on Education, "More than half the students now engaged in four year college programs will need to use computers

In their professional work." Logic indicates the other half had better know what computers are all about if they are to become leaders and managers. Yes, the field of computer programming and systems is becoming an increasingly vital one. It is one that you, to be successful, must be knowledgeable about. We don't necessarily mean that you should attend our course to become a practicing computer programmer (although you very well might want to - it's an excellent career and capable people are in great demand); we do mean that you should come to us to obtain an understanding of modern computer techniques so that you can apply this knowledge in your own chosen field.

If you plan to be a leader in any organization that is going places, you'll need this complement to your education. Super Williams-Nuness Rematch Looms

By PAUL STEVENS

A rematch of two of the finest players ever to graduate from Iowa's junior college basketball ranks will take place Saturday night when Iowa's Hawkeyes clash with Minnesota in a Big 10 conference game in the Field House.

The players, Super Sam Williams of Iowa and Al Nuness of Minnesota, have represented the state of Iowa on the first team Junior College All-America squad during the past two seasons.

Williams, a 6-4 senior from Detroit, Mich., played a sparkling two years for Coach Ed Spurling at Burlington J.C. and during his sophomore season in 1966, he was an All-America selection.

Nuness, a junior from Maywood, Ill., averaged over 20 points during both his years under Coach Gary Hulst at Fort Dodge Community College, and in his sophomore season in 1967, the 6-3 sharp-shooting guard became the first player ever to be named to All-America honors from his school.

Now both players have won starting positions on their respective Big 10 teams and will meet for the second time Saturday night.

If Saturday's rematch takes on any resemblance of the first meeting between the two stars, then Hawkeye fans should be in for a whole of a contest.

Two seasons ago, Burlington J.C. commonly known as Sam Williams and Company, was a devastating outfit. The Blackhawks had whipped 22 straight opponents and entered the finals of the Iowa-Nebraska regional as the nation's top-ranked team. Also on that squad was Milan Vorkapick and Roger Blalock, who later continued his basketball play at Purdue.

The Blackhawks' opponent was Fort Dodge J.C.'s Panthers, who behind the one-two scoring punch of Nuness and Ron Sanford had rolled to a 19-3 record entering the finals of the regional.

Fort Dodge, then ranked among the nation's Top 20, had by far the tallest team assembled in Iowa with 6-10 Sanford, 6-11 Greg Fillmore and 6-8 John Engelbrecht in the front line. Sanford currently is a starter for New Mexico State's tenth-ranked Lobos.

But Williams and Company never trailed in the contest and hung a nine-point loss on the tall Panthers. Sam scored 36 points in that game, six above his average, while Nuness hit 17 for Fort Dodge.

Last season, while Williams was living up to his expectations as the Hawkeyes' leading scorer and an all-Big 10 pick, Nuness had improved his play to the point where he filled Sam's shoes on the J.C. All-America team.

Now the stage is set for a return engagement between the two players, and both enter the game with the highest amount of respect for one another.

"Sam has got to be pound for pound, inch for inch — the toughest ball player I've gone against," Nuness said. "We've played against UCLA and Lew Alcindor, but I think Sam can do more things better than Lew. I'm sure glad I don't have to guard him."

"I saw him out at the Los Angeles Classic, and he's still the same old happy Sam. He plays the same type of ball that he did in junior college . . . he doesn't seem to have changed a bit. Sam is just as hard to play against today as he was two years ago."

And Williams' statistics support Nuness' praise. Sam hasn't scored under 28 points in his last five games and currently leads Iowa with a 25.5 scoring average. He is also the Hawks' most effective rebounder with 124 in 12 games.

"I saw Al play out West and he's very improved over the last time we met," Williams said. "He was a fine player in J.C. and he's a fine player now."

Nuness has averaged 13 points a game for the Gophers, but his total should take a big jump after Tuesday night's contest at Northwestern. Although Minnesota lost 77-72, Nuness fired in 30 points, his highest total since donning a Minnesota uniform. Al connected on 14 of 23 shots from the field.

"It takes a while to get used to a new team and new patterns, but I think its starting to come," said Nuness. "At first, I thought the coaches were overlooking the fact that I could score. But it wasn't that at all. It was just that I wasn't taking advantage of my options. Now I think my shooting will come around."

Despite fears of Hawkeye fans early in the season that Sam had lost his wondrous scoring touch, there was one person who never worried — and that was Sam himself.

"Right now, I've been concentrating mainly on defense and rebounding because that's what our team needs to win," Williams said. "If I can go through a game without scoring and we still win, then I would be satisfied if I could help on defense and rebounding."

Official Accuses AAU Of Breaking Trust Law

LOS ALTOS, Calif. (AP) — The president of the U.S. Track and Field Federation said Wednesday he had asked the Justice Department to investigate the Amateur Athletic Union for "clear and cogent violations of the Sherman antitrust laws."

If the U.S. attorney general should fail to respond, asserted the Rev. Wilfred H. Crowley, then his federation will go to court "to establish freedom and constitutional rights" for athletes.

"The U.S. Track and Field Federation calls upon the Justice Department to investigate with all possible speed the illegal, monopolistic practices of the Amateur Athletic Union," he said in a telegram.

placed undue and arbitrary restraints on athletic competition, restricted the freedom of American athletes and attempted to destroy other amateur sports organizations sponsoring broad-ended competition and developmental programs in American amateur sports."

On Monday, Col. Donald Hull, AAU executive director, said the track federation should ask sanction by the AAU for the indoor meet the federation plans to hold Feb. 9 in New York City. If the federation does not ask such sanction, Hull said, the AAU then would report the names of all competing athletes to the International Amateur Athletic Federation and this conceivably could affect Olympic eligibility.

Merged Schools To Spread Quality

Last Of Three Articles
The accident of birthplace, with its implications for education, could lose its importance in Iowa under a proposed system of multi-county school agencies.

E. Robert Stephens, assistant professor of school administration, said that one of the seven prime benefits of the merged county school system would be to guarantee for the state's sparsely populated sections educational opportunities as good as those in counties with more people.

Stephens directed a 1967 study on the need for what he calls the Regional Educational Source Agency (or RESA) in Iowa.

The RESA would not replace the local school district, Stephens said, but would help the district improve programs which might be weak because of limited student population, limited financial resources or lack of specialized professional personnel.

Stephens cited six other advantages to creating a RESA out of independent county school systems: protecting local control, promoting economical and efficient operation, improving educational quality, providing a needed change agent, encouraging a restructured school government, and improving coordination of local, regional and statewide educational planning.

The RESA is basically a local agency, although it performs administrative and regulatory duties for the State Department of Public Instruction. If the RESA stimulates better and more varied programs in local school districts, the districts can retain

"maximum policy determination."

• Money can be saved and personnel put to best use because the RESA can exploit "economies of scale," based on the assumption that one larger operation can be run less expensively than several smaller ones. Examples are joint purchasing and data processing, in-service programs for personnel, and programs for exceptional children.

• Educational quality can be improved because the RESA operates on a larger base, serving more students, having access to greater financial assets and attracting highly qualified personnel.

• The RESA can make needed changes, because it is relatively free from tradition, narrow focus, and inadequacies of finance, personnel and time.

• The RESA can help education adapt to modern regional approach now used increasingly in medicine, mental health, corrections, flood control, conservation, highway improvement, and urban and rural planning.

• As the middleman, the RESA can provide information and help to the local districts and the State Department of Public Instruction, and can promote cooperation with other regional governmental agencies.

Iowa is one of a few states which permits adjacent counties to merge their school systems, and since the enabling law was passed in 1965, three RESA's have been formed: Scott-Muscatine, Buchanan-Black Hawk, and Floyd-Worth-Mitchell-Cerro Gordo.

County school officials and other interested persons have been invited to a series of meetings about the Stephens report to be sponsored by University of Northern Iowa during late January. The dates and places are Jan. 23, Oelwein and Webster City; Jan. 24, Monticello and Algonia; Jan. 25, Oskaloosa and Red Oak and Jan. 30, Wapello and LeMars.

40 Nurses Attend Conference Here

Forty nurses are attending a conference on school nursing here today through Saturday and will return to the campus for another session March 13 to 15.

The conference is being sponsored by the College of Nursing in cooperation with the State Department of Public Instruction.

Major aims are to help nurses to understand problems of economically deprived families and to define the role of the school nurse in assisting children and parents in these families.

Cummins Named Philosophy Head

Phillip D. Cummins, assistant professor of philosophy, will take over as head of the department effective Feb. 1, The Daily Iowan has learned.

His appointment came as a result of the resignation of Edwin B. Allaire, professor and current head of the department. Allaire will remain on the teaching staff of the University until Sept. 1.

Cummins received his B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University. He began teaching at Washington University in St. Louis in 1961 and returned to the University in 1963.

FEELING HER OATS — Visiting the Minneapolis Grain Exchange building Tuesday morning was Jean London, a former South Dakota farm girl turned actress. She is currently touring the country for South Dakota's tourist association. Climbing atop a handy desk on the trading floor, Miss London gave a short speech promoting her home state along with her feminine charms. The exchange was reportedly very active for the rest of the day.

10 Iowa Students Plan To Visit Washington

Sixteen Iowa college students will receive expense-paid Week-in-Washington internships during the current congressional session to study politics and government in Washington, D.C.

The Week-in-Washington program is sponsored by the Iowa Center for Education in Politics (ICEP) in cooperation with the Democratic and Republican parties in Iowa. ICEP is part of the University's Division of Special Services.

As guests of the Iowa congressional delegation, the students will attend committee meetings and sessions of the House and Senate, meet leaders in the congressional and executive branches, and visit the national

Directors Answer Food Complaints

By MARY CLARK
"Not that I mind white toast and ham . . . but I could have sworn that I had ordered wheat toast and bacon . . ."

Thus began a list of complaints against the Union food service by Michael J. Dykstra, A.S. Iowa City, in a letter to The Daily Iowan editor Jan. 11.

Dykstra complained that the service in the Wheel Room cafeteria "was slower, the number of personnel reduced, the varieties of food less, the size of servings smaller and the prices higher than the cafeteria formerly operated in the Gold Feather Room."

Loren Kottner, director of the Union, and Kenneth Robe, director of Union food service, answered Dykstra's complaints in interviews Tuesday.

Kottner said that because the Wheel Room had several serving lines 15 persons could be served in one minute in comparison to the Gold Feather Room's former rate of five per minute.

Robe said that a "shopping center" type of arrangement in the Wheel Room gave persons a greater selection and kept lines moving. He also said that the number of persons working there had been increased.

Both men denied that there had been price changes or that the size of servings had been reduced.

"A Bright Spot"
In the demonstration against the Marine recruiters, the arrival of the police was greeted by cheers. "Police were a bright spot," wrote Bill Newbrough, The Daily Iowan editor.

In the second demonstration in which some demonstrators are accused of using radio communications—while the police were on campus, some demonstrators walked to the Civic Center, where police headquarters are.

"At times like this, that badge gets to weigh a lot," McCahey said, "but we have a lot of young men in the department. We are all learning fast."

Charges of police brutality
The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, alleges specifically that the manufacturers "maintained . . . unreasonably high, substantially identical and noncompetitive prices" on the sale of more than 100,000 units of the drug between 1953 and 1956.

The action, filed under the Sherman Antitrust Act, seeks damages from Chas. Pfizer and Co., American Cyanamid Co., Bristol-Myers Co. and Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp., all of New York, and the Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich.

Four drugs were named in the complaint: Aureomycin, Terramycin, Tetracycline and Chloromycetin, which the state buys for use at institutions administered by the Board of Controls and its universities.

Chief McCahey A Man Pro For His Bu

By TOM RAFTLRY

"We are encouraging our officers to become a real part of the community by joining clubs and being active in community programs," said Iowa City Police Chief Patrick J. McCahey recently, as his brows characteristically arched and threatened to take flight.

McCahey once took a Dale Carnegie extension course in public speaking, but one suspects he never really needed it. He is a man who is involved with his work and he seems to enjoy talking about it.

McCahey became police chief on June 1, 1967, after 18 years and 8 months in the Police Department.

"He is Iowa City's police chief because he prepared himself for the job," said Frank R. Smiley, city manager.

Last April, one month after Smiley took over as city manager, John Ruppert, who was then the chief of police, asked to be relieved and returned to the rank of captain.

Several members of the department applied and were interviewed for the job by Smiley.

"McCahey advanced his education, especially in police science," said Smiley. "He did quite a bit of work on his own."

Recent student demonstrations on campus resulted in two interventions on campus by McCahey and his men.

On both occasions, the Police Department here was assisted by several other law enforcement agencies.

On Nov. 1, there was an antiwar demonstration directed against U.S. Marine Corps recruiters on campus. As a result of this demonstration, 108 persons were arrested.

On Dec. 5, there was another antiwar demonstration—this time directed against Dow Chemical Co. Dow makes napalm used in the Vietnamese war and was recruiting on campus that day. Eighteen persons were arrested.

"You sweat out the wait in the squad room," McCahey said, speaking about those moments the police have been alerted for "riot" control.

Preparing since Summer
"We have been preparing for riots since the summer," McCahey said. "Since then, we have been obtaining riot equipment and have had riot training."

The man behind the badge, McCahey said, may be called a "Nazi pig," but his bitterness is often caused by having to leave most of his community open to potential murderers, rapists and robbers.

During the demonstrations, when the men moved to the University to join other law enforcement agents, several of them had just come off earlier shifts.

"When you are alerted for a riot," McCahey said, "sometimes you do not have a chance to go home and get a good meal. You call your wife and tell her not to worry. You put your trust in your fellow officers and your training."

State Brings Suit Against 4 Drug Firms

DES MOINES (AP)—Iowa sued five major drug firms for triple damages Wednesday, claiming they had conspired to fix prices and monopolize the sale and distribution of antibiotics in the United States.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, alleges specifically that the manufacturers "maintained . . . unreasonably high, substantially identical and noncompetitive prices" on the sale of more than 100,000 units of the drug between 1953 and 1956.

Chief McCarney: A Man Prepared For His Busy Job

By TOM RAFTERY

"We are encouraging our officers to become a real part of the community by joining clubs and being active in community programs," said Iowa City Police Chief Patrick J. McCarney recently, as his brows characteristically arched and threatened to take flight.

McCarney once took a Dale Carnegie extension course in public speaking, but one suspects he never really needed it. He is a man who is involved with his work and he seems to enjoy talking about it.

McCarney became police chief on June 1, 1967, after 18 years and 8 months in the Police Department.

"He is Iowa City's police chief because he prepared himself for the job," said Frank R. Smiley, city manager.

Last April, one month after Smiley took over as city manager, John Ruppert, who was then the chief of police, asked to be relieved and returned to the rank of captain.

Several members of the department applied and were interviewed for the job by Smiley.

"McCarney advanced his education, especially in police science," said Smiley. "He did quite a bit of work on his own."

Recent student demonstrations on campus resulted in two interventions on campus by McCarney and his men.

On both occasions, the Police Department here was assisted by several other law enforcement agencies.

On Nov. 1, there was an anti-war demonstration directed against U.S. Marine Corps recruiters on campus. As a result of this demonstration, 108 persons were arrested.

On Dec. 5, there was another anti-war demonstration—this time directed against Dow Chemical Co. Dow makes napalm used in the Vietnamese war and was recruiting on campus that day. Eighteen persons were arrested.

"You sweat out the wait in the squad room," McCarney said, speaking about those moments the police have been alerted for "riot" control.

Preparing Since Summer
"We have been preparing for riots since the summer," McCarney said. "Since then, we have been obtaining riot equipment and have had riot training."

The man behind the badge, McCarney said, may be called a "Nazi pig," but his bitterest feeling is often caused by having to leave most of his community open to potential murderers, rapists and robbers.

During the demonstrations, when the men moved to the University to join other law enforcement agents, several of them had just come off earlier shifts.

"When you are alerted for a riot," McCarney said, "sometimes you do not have a chance to go home and get a good meal. You call your wife and tell her not to worry. You put your trust in your fellow officers and your training."

"A Bright Spot"
In the demonstration against the Marine recruiters, the arrival of the police was greeted by cheers. "Police were a bright spot," wrote Bill Newbrough, The Daily Iowan editor.

In the second demonstration—in which some demonstrators are accused of using radio communications—while the police were on campus, some demonstrators walked to the Civic Center, where police headquarters are.

"At times like this, that badge gets to weigh a lot," McCarney said, "but we have a lot of young men in the department. We are all learning fast."

Charges of police brutality
The suit, filed in U.S. District Court, alleges specifically that the manufacturers "maintained . . . unreasonably high, substantially identical and noncompetitive prices" on the sale of more than 100 drugs between 1953 and 1956.

The action, filed under the Sherman Antitrust Act, seeks damages from Chas. Pfizer and Co., American Cyanamid Co., Bristol-Myers Co. and Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp., all of New York, and the Upjohn Co. of Kalamazoo, Mich.

Four drugs were named in the complaint: Aureomycin, Terramycin, Tetracycline and Chloromycetin, which the state buys for use at institutions administered by the Board of Controls and its universities.

They were made. They were answered by Smiley at a City Council meeting. He said the demonstrators were "causing and looking for trouble" and the police "did a good job."

Sheriff Maynard E. Schneider said that he often talked about law enforcement problems with McCarney.

"He is a fine law enforcement officer who is doing a good job," Schneider said.

John H. Hanna, chief of the University's Campus Security, said, "McCarney is right there if we need him." McCarney is in favor of deputizing Haana's campus police.

The Johnson County Peace Officers Association recently named McCarney "Peace Officer of the Year." The association is made up of men who live in Johnson County and who serve in state, county and local law enforcement agencies.

The Police Department commanded by McCarney has an assistant chief, three captains, a lieutenant detective, three sergeant detectives and 20 patrolmen.

Patrolmen receive their training from the older department members. However, in July, new patrolmen will go to the Cedar Rapids Police Academy. They will train there for four weeks with Cedar Rapids police personnel before going on duty in Iowa City.

When Ruppert resigned as chief of police, he suggested that the job of assistant chief be created. Until this post was created, the chief of police spent most of his time grappling with paper work.

Good Public Relations
When Emmett E. Evans took over the job of assistant chief, McCarney had more time to go out into the community and represent the Police Department.

"McCarney is doing a very good public relations job for the Police Department," said Donald K. Woolley, assistant professor of journalism, who teaches public relations and photography at the University.

While a sergeant, McCarney took a photography course from Woolley. He is one of four Iowa City policemen who completed the course. He received an "A."

Most of the pictures of the Iowa City policemen that are displayed in a glass case at the Police Department were taken by McCarney.

The Iowa City Police Department's first open house was held last Sept. 19, under McCarney's direction. Policemen brought their families and friends.

McCarney is now planning to hold open house for the news media, the bar association and members of the community service clubs.

An open house for the public is also being considered.

"Image" in Mind
"We want the people of Iowa City to see how their police department works. Some of them may think we're bastards, because they only know us by traffic tickets they get," McCarney said.

McCarney, 44, was born in Pueblo, Colo. He lives with his wife and children at 1705 Morningside Dr. As a police chief, he earns $8,952 a year.

He met his wife, Mary June, who worked in a military dental clinic in Arizona, while he was in the Army Air Corps. They were married on Oct. 20, 1941, in Tucson, Ariz. Mrs. McCarney now works at the University Dental Clinic.

The McCarneys have four children. The oldest, Michael, 14, will enter the Air Force in June as a lieutenant. Kathleen, 17, is a senior at City High School. Patrick Daniel, 14, is in the ninth grade at Southeast Junior High School and Mary Ann, 11, is in the sixth grade at Herbert Hoover School.

Over the summer, although there is no official record of it, the McCarneys had a fifth child at their home. McCarney took a temporarily lost child home to have dinner with his family.

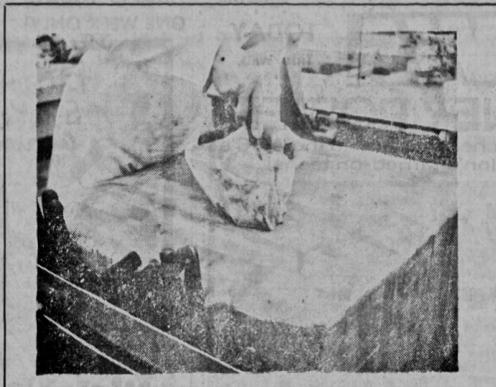

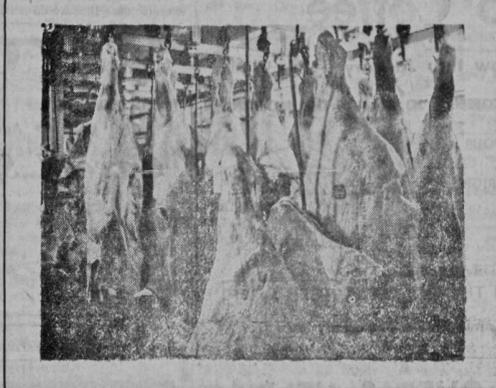

McCarney has applied for training at the FBI Academy. He hopes to apply what he learns there to the Police Department here.

Anti-U.S. Protest Broken In Japan
SASEBO, Japan (AP)—Beaten back trying to invade the U.S. Navy base here, 800 leftist Zengakuren students left Sasebo by train Wednesday. They promised to return for new demonstrations against the visit of the American nuclear-powered aircraft carrier Enterprise.

In Tokyo, about 8,000 Zengakuren students demonstrated in a park near the U.S. Embassy and the residence of the prime minister. About 20 persons were injured when a clash broke out between students and police near the prime minister's home. Others staged a sit-in outside the U.S. Embassy but were removed by the police.

THE STORY OF RANDALL'S U.S.D.A. CHOICE BEEF...

Randall's SUPER VALU

What is the first thing we do with U.S.D.A. CHOICE beef arriving at RANDALL'S? . . . we age it . . . that's right, we age it . . . because this is the only way we can guarantee you of getting the finest quality beef to serve your family. Each head of beef arriving at RANDALL'S is hung in our special aging cooler, where it is kept under a watchful eye by our experienced meat men, for a period of one week to ten days. Then, when they feel it has reached its peak of flavor and tenderness it is moved to the cutting room, where the beef begins the second step in providing you with the most meat for your money.

After nature is done with its slow process of aging for flavor and tenderness . . . the skillful hands of RANDALL'S meat cutters take over. This is where the real difference is made in the meat you buy. Our meat cutters trim and remove all excess bone and fat before weighing and pricing. This means that you are paying only for the lean cut of meat that you see in the package. This service is done without an increase in the cost per pound of the meat you are buying. Plus if you want a special cut of meat, just ask, we'll be glad to get you anything that you do not see in the case at no extra cost.

. . . Now we have a beautifully trimmed piece of beef, that has been aged for flavor and tenderness, ready to be wrapped and put in the case. All cuts of meat at RANDALL'S are weighed and priced automatically, to insure you of paying the correct price for each and every item from our meat department. Then they are wrapped by the most modern methods, providing an air tight seal, that protects the quality and flavor that RANDALL'S has worked so hard to obtain. From here the packages go to the meat case for your selection. This entire process goes on daily at RANDALL'S providing the finest beef available in IOWA CITY and CORALVILLE . . . plus . . . we sell our meats at the lowest prices, too!

Hickerson Faces Problems Of Unifying University, City Life

By RICK GARR
 Iowa City's new mayor, Loren Hickerson, is gradually getting used to his job, but the 49-year-old former councilman admits that he still has some adjusting to do.
 "I am still in that stage," he told the League of Women Voters recently. "when people say, 'Hello, Mayor,' and I turn around to see where the mayor is."
 And, although Hickerson has only served one term on the City Council and is relatively new to municipal government, he has been a resident of Iowa City for more than 30 years and he has some definite plans for his term as mayor.
 "I believe the finest possible philosophy in Iowa City public affairs," he said recently, "is the perfect partnership between the University and municipal life. We have that now in varying important ways, such as the on-going working relationship in administration and policy-making, but never in the city's history has it been stronger and better than it is today."

 Hickerson admits that he has several potential stumbling blocks in his way, but he intends to overcome as many of these as he can to improve the city government.
 A big problem facing him now, and one that faces most public officials, is the increased demands on his time. For example, any reporter who intends to interview Hickerson for more than 15 minutes should plan on being interrupted by phone calls at least twice.
 Another matter of urgency Hickerson now faces in the fact that the city is presently unable to take action on urban renewal plans. The new mayor and a councilman have been served with a court injunction forbidding them to vote on the issue because of a possible conflict of interest between their private occupations and positions as public officials. Although Hickerson does not own land in the proposed urban renewal area, he is enjoined from voting because he is an employee of the University, which also has a vested interest in the renewal sites. He is director of community relations for the University.

 Hickerson is somewhat impatient about the Johnson County District Court injunction, but he said that he thought it would all work out for the best.
 "The council faces many problems, including the continuing urgent problem of redevelopment in the heart of the city," he said. "But until the case is settled, and as long as the injunction applies to me, I am trying to observe it in both spirit and letter. Besides, there are other problems the city faces."
 First among these, he said, is the streamlining of municipal government and the development of long range city policies.
 "I am thinking here of things like bridges, arterial street development, and all such not and bolt things, but most importantly," he added, "we have the causes we believe in rather than help them."

 In his new role as mayor, Hickerson, who was chosen by the council on Jan. 2, admitted that he had a few personal problems and limitations, but he said he thought he could adequately work around these.
 One is the mayor's position in the council-manager type of government which Iowa City has, and on this point Hickerson is quite realistic in his outlook.
 For example, he gave this picture of his role in a recent address:
 "Under our form of government, the mayor presides at meetings of the council and performs a variety of special chores for the council and for the city. But in the making of council decisions, he contributes only 20 per cent of the vote. There is nothing in the rules which authorize him to anticipate specific council actions nor to establish city policies by inference."
 "I want to avoid the impression that I speak for the council, except on matters which the council already has spoken through action as a group."
 But to make more constructive contributions to the city's progress, Hickerson said he would use the office of mayor to mold public opinion.
 "There is nothing in the rules," he said, "which curbs the mayor's freedom to accept speaking engagements and otherwise to state his opinions," and this he intends to do extensively.
 A balding extrovert, with a natural wide grin and a firm handshake, Hickerson is also a forceful speaker. From this it would seem that he will probably have some success in taking his message to the public.
 Finally, another factor in Hickerson's use of the mayor's office is the nature of his election. He was first chosen to the council in 1965, and after only two years of his four-year term he was chosen mayor by his fellows on the council.

"Probably about 50 per cent of the reason I was chosen," he chuckled, "was because I was one of the two holdover councilmen who had at least two years of experience in municipal affairs."
 Much of the other 50 per cent, though, was probably because of his willingness to take the job and suffer the loss of time for other tasks this entails.
 A native Iowan, Hickerson was born in 1918 in Mount Ayr, where he grew up and attended local schools. He was graduated in 1936 from Mount Ayr High School, where he was a state champion debater.
 He came to the University on a debate scholarship and was on the debate team here for the next four years. He also was a student journalist, serving as editor of The Daily Iowan for two years.
 He received his bachelor's degree in 1940 along with a certificate in journalism. Following his graduation, he was married to the former Ellen Christiansen in 1941. In 1942 he was commissioned a naval officer and he spent the next three years serving in World War II.
 In the Pacific theater, earning a total of 13 bronze stars in such actions as the liberation of the Philippines and the conquest of Okinawa.
 After his discharge in 1945, he returned to Iowa City to become a journalism instructor and an assistant at the University Alumni Service. He was promoted to director of alumni records and executive director of the Alumni Association in 1947, a post he held until he was appointed community relations director in 1966.
 Hickerson's work with University alumni probably brought him his most fame. He has been known to thousands of them as a symbol of the University, mostly on the basis of his writings in the Iowa Alumni Review.
 One of his columns in the October, 1956, Review, called "The Future of the State of Iowa," was reprinted by the Alumni Association and more than 40,000 copies were distributed over the years. In the article he challenged the people of Iowa to care more about the state, to put less emphasis on agriculture alone as a panacea for the state's ills, and to help keep the best young people in the state.
 In a 1958 speech in Des Moines to the governor's conference on economic and social trends, Hickerson described what he called the "Iowa state of mind," a phrase he borrowed from the Iowa composer Meredith Willson of "Music Man" fame.
 Hickerson noted that agriculture was on the decline and suggested that for the state to grow it would have to turn to move diversity in industry as well as agriculture. But, he thinks things are different now.
 "The Iowa state of mind has changed and is now changing," he said. "I consider the Iowan more realistic about the University, the country and the world than he was 10 years ago, when I made that statement, because of what has happened in that time."
 "I feel that University life and the experience here in the last 10 years are matched out in the state by a different state of mind. The people of Iowa are just more realistic and understanding of the new kinds of University needs."
 Hickerson, who was elected to the city council in a non-partisan race, is a professional Republican, though with reservations.
 "Although I am a Republican and have spoken many times to Republicans," he said, "I have never acted in any sense from political motivation. I don't consider my only elected public office as political, and I have always considered myself a realistic conservative who regards change as essential to the preservation of those things" (Continued on Page 9) a greater challenge to try to correlate sound, long-range community goals."

 And, he said, underlying all the city's problems is the fact, well illustrated by the urban renewal issue, that the council is often put in the position of being the proponent of unpopular programs just because it has to work for the future good of the city.
 The problem of student demonstrations at the University also weighed heavily on his mind as both city official and University administrator, he said, and he has some definite beliefs on such forms of behavior.
 "My principal concern," he said in speaking of his joint role, "lies not in a lack of sympathy for some of the greater causes involved, but in what seems to be the clear reality that the causes of freedom are in great danger of being hurt by the reaction of citizens in general to law violation and the threat of it."
 "In this situation," Hickerson concluded, "it seems to me that students and all of us need to exercise care that we do not hurt the causes we believe in rather than help them."

 In his new role as mayor, Hickerson, who was chosen by the council on Jan. 2, admitted that he had a few personal problems and limitations, but he said he thought he could adequately work around these.
 One is the mayor's position in the council-manager type of government which Iowa City has, and on this point Hickerson is quite realistic in his outlook.
 For example, he gave this picture of his role in a recent address:
 "Under our form of government, the mayor presides at meetings of the council and performs a variety of special chores for the council and for the city. But in the making of council decisions, he contributes only 20 per cent of the vote. There is nothing in the rules which authorize him to anticipate specific council actions nor to establish city policies by inference."
 "I want to avoid the impression that I speak for the council, except on matters which the council already has spoken through action as a group."
 But to make more constructive contributions to the city's progress, Hickerson said he would use the office of mayor to mold public opinion.
 "There is nothing in the rules," he said, "which curbs the mayor's freedom to accept speaking engagements and otherwise to state his opinions," and this he intends to do extensively.
 A balding extrovert, with a natural wide grin and a firm handshake, Hickerson is also a forceful speaker. From this it would seem that he will probably have some success in taking his message to the public.
 Finally, another factor in Hickerson's use of the mayor's office is the nature of his election. He was first chosen to the council in 1965, and after only two years of his four-year term he was chosen mayor by his fellows on the council.

Micro-Manipulation
 Chemical changes occurring in single muscle cells may provide clues to the cause of muscular dystrophy. Here a cell biologist at the Institute for Muscular Disease uses a micro-manipulator to "pluck" a single fiber from a piece of tissue. The Institute is sponsored by Muscular Dystrophy Association of America whose annual fund raising drive, the March Against Muscular Dystrophy, is now under way throughout the country.

 in social life most important, in contrast to the reactionary position of locking them in and never considering altering them."
 "I see my role as more of non-partisan critic," he said, and he added that he had been asked for his endorsement by several candidates in both state and national elections before, but he had always refused.
 In the future, he said he would take no active role in the 1968 races or have any ambitions for higher office himself.
 "I believe," he said, "I can do more for the community objective of progress in this way, as I have done in earlier bipartisan roles."
 He sincerely believes that his position with the Alumni Association better prepared him for municipal government because he gained so much knowledge of working with local problems, and he believes it opened his eyes to these problems probably more than would most other University positions.
 And, naturally, progress in University-city relations is one of his major strengths.
 "My great hope," he likes to say, "is that we can develop in the community and the people of Iowa City today a sharper sense of what we want the city to be; we have to review our goals just as we have to review some of our ordinances."
 "The city and the University are working together and neither can afford to move in significant areas of government and development unilaterally, because too much is at stake for both."
 "Any city which can boast of a quality institution has probably the world's finest municipal asset. There may be a fine line, or what seems to be a fine line, between the best interests of the University and the city, but in the long term view, that line fades into nothingness."
 Hickerson and his wife have two children, both attending Lawrence University in Appleton, Wis. Daughter Sally, 21, is a senior in elementary education. Son Karl, 19, who plays on the Lawrence basketball squad, has an undeclared major.
 Mrs. Hickerson has a master's degree from the University in education and is in her first full year of full time teaching with a fifth grade class in Iowa City's Herbert Hoover School.

"Probably about 50 per cent the reason I was chosen," he chuckled, "was because I was one of the two holdover councilmen who had at least two years experience in municipal affairs."

Much of the other 50 percent, though, was probably because of his willingness to take the job and suffer the loss of time for other tasks this entails.

A native Iowan, Hickerson was born in 1918 in Mount Airy, where he grew up and attended local schools. He was graduated in 1936 from Mount Airy High School, where he was a state champion water polo player.

He came to the University on a debate scholarship and was on a debate team here for the next two years. He also was a student journalist, serving as editor of The Daily Iowan for two years.

He received his bachelor's degree in 1940 along with a certificate in journalism. Following his graduation, he was married to the former Ellen Christiansen in 1941. In 1942 he was commissioned a naval officer and he spent the next three years serving in World War II.

After the Pacific theater, earning a degree from the University of Iowa, he worked for the U.S. Navy, and then for the U.S. Coast Guard, where he was in charge of the operation of the ship's radio.

After his discharge in 1945, he returned to Iowa City to become a newspaperman, working for the Daily Iowan as a copy editor and then as a reporter. He was promoted to editor of the paper in 1956.

Hickerson's work with the University of Iowa probably brought him to the attention of the University's board of trustees, which has been named to the University's board of trustees on the basis of his writings.

One of his columns in the October, 1956, Review, called "The Future of the State of Iowa," was reprinted by the U.S. House of Representatives and more than 40,000 copies were distributed over the years. In the article he challenged the people of Iowa to care more about the state, to put less emphasis on agriculture alone as a panacea for the state's ills, and to help the best young people in the state.

In a 1958 speech in Des Moines at the governor's conference on economic and social trends, Hickerson described what he called "Iowa state of mind," a phrase he borrowed from the composer Meredith Willson's "Music Man" fame.

Hickerson noted that agriculture was on the decline and suggested that for the state to grow would have to turn to move in a different way.

"The Iowa state of mind has changed and is now changing," he said. "I consider the Iowa state of mind to be realistic about the University and the world and the world he was 10 years ago, when he made that statement, because what has happened in that time."

He felt that University life and experience here in the last 25 years are matched out in the state by a different state of mind. The people of Iowa are just as realistic and understanding as the new kinds of University students.

Hickerson, who was elected to the city council in a non-partisan election, is a professional Republican, with high reservations.

Although I am a Republican, I have spoken many times to the Democrats," he said, "I have acted in any sense from a political motivation. I don't consider my only elected public office as political, and I always considered myself a realistic conservative who would change as essential to the preservation of those things (Continued on Page 9)

Projections Seen As Group's Value

By CHERYL ARVIDSON

The greatest value of the Johnson County Regional Planning Commission is in its future projections. Alan D. Vestal, professor of law and chairman of the regional planning commission, said Wednesday.

Vestal, who spoke at an Optimist's Club Luncheon at the Elks Club, said a regional planning commission planned for long-range situations, while a city council dealt mainly with daily matters.

The Johnson County Regional Planning Commission was established under a statute provision in the Iowa Code but was given only recommendation powers, Vestal said. Therefore, none of the participating intergovernmental units surrendered any power to the commission.

Regional planning works with an annual budget of $11,000. It receives $7,000 from Iowa City, $1,800 from the University and the remainder from other participating units on the basis of number of persons involved.

To receive federal grant in aid funds, a community must now be involved in a regional planning program, Vestal said.

"It is desirable to have an interchange of ideas on regional problems," Vestal said.

3 Iowans Appeal Armbands Ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorneys for three Iowa school children petitioned the Supreme Court Wednesday to establish their right to wear black arm bands in protests of the Vietnamese war.

Federal courts in Des Moines and St. Louis have backed school officials who prohibited this form of demonstration. Appearing, Dan Johnston, a Des Moines lawyer, and Melvin L. Wolf of the American Civil Liberties Union, said:

"If citizens are instructed from kindergarten through high school that their political expression may be curtailed at the whim of school officers, and if it may be forbidden entirely for the sake of preserving discipline, society will be the loser . . ."

"The right of free speech embodied in the First Amendment is a lifeless right unless encouraged during school years," the appeal said.
