State colleges should have different admission standards

The Regents Thursday all but refused planning consultant's advice to establish a state-wide policy on student body in Iowa that would be different from the three conventional ones under Regents control.

Two firms from New York were asked to conduct the survey and role of a college in western Iowa. The firms also studied the qualifications of Iowa students to college in surrounding states and the image for this magnitude.

The firms reported that college in Missouri. Dakota and Minnesota had large numbers of Iowa students enrolled. The reasons for the Iowa college students who improve tuition and admission requirements. While Iowa has not only those students in the upper half of their high school grades, schools in surrounding states have lower admission requirements. The tuition in more than those below than those below the state's institutions.

Regent members were divided in making a difficult type of state institution. They seem to be asking the same question to other state students is based solely on the fact that they have an Iowa state institutions in western Iowa.

However, this is not the case. Many students fall into the Iowa Survey of their high school grades. Costs to consider the cost to offer a liberal education in a college setting.

Many students need special help and chance at a smaller state as is another state. The faculty-student ratio is more favorable at these institutions and more personal in state institutions. Many students can't afford the relatively high tuition in new schools in Iowa and enroll in one of these state college.

The last reason is for offering a college education to the students who need both high requirements and also want a college education is that the three state colleges are designed primarily for service to state residents.

Students who meet the requirements for admission to either the University of Northern Iowa (UNI) or the University of Northern Iowa (USD) will choose one of those colleges. Iowa State is an
