No more 'Moo U'

The Story County Grand Jury has been busy these past months as the Christmas vacation slump they have managed, at any rate, to avoid interesting prods and even interesting threats.

For the grand jury decided to investigate what they called "irregularities and mismanagement of the Board of Regents".

But after the grand jury's investigation, Iowa State University was moved to 'Moo U.' Indeed, they are even busy at radiating campus crime.

The members of Iowa State University were so terribly infiltrated by radical students and faculty members that the State Board of Regents must now save and clean up the college.

All who would want to send their son or daughters to Iowa State for agricultural training and then have them bring back home swinging placards instead of shining corn stalks are being told, "How are you going to keep 'em down on the farm after a year at Iowa State?"

To focus their condemnations upon their peers, the Story County Grand Jury decided to investigate the Story County jail. 'And what they found was shocking,' patch that is. The jail has been turned into a symbol of the criminal atmosphere of a small town.

The investigation, although they may not want to admit it, had justly become somewhat of a farce.

In the first place, there must be more to worry about than the color of a jail's walls. In the second place, a county grand jury has no business investigating the conduct of a university.

Nevertheless, the grand jury was appointed by the governor of Iowa, with the consent of the Iowa Association of University Presidents.

The grand jury hearings were set to begin at 9 a.m. on October 11th. The sessions will be held in secret, but also under the control of the entire university.

No charges were filed against the Iowa State University, and no members of the Board of Regents were invited to the hearings.

The grand jury's report was to be presented to the Governor of Iowa on November 11th.

Year of the youth

Berkeley, the 'eye of a hurricane'

Unrest rampant in California colleges everywhere except apathetic Berkeley

The annual Chinese lunar calendar designates the year 1968 as the Year of the 'Moo' (or Pig). A year when the animal of the year is said to be evil, and it will be laden with misfortune for the entire world. For the 'Moo' is considered to be a year for a new start, a year for change, and a year for turmoil.

The year of the 'Moo' is said to be a year of great change in China itself. The country is undergoing a period of major reform, and many believe that this year will be a turning point for the country.

In the United States, the year of the 'Moo' has been characterized by a number of significant events. The Civil Rights movement has gained momentum, and the country has seen a rise in political and social unrest. The Vietnam War has continued to be a major issue, and the country has been divided on the matter.

The Year of the 'Moo' is also said to be a time of great change in the world of entertainment. The Beatles have disbanded, and Led Zeppelin has announced that they will take a break from touring. The rock and roll scene has been in flux, and many new bands have emerged.

In the world of politics, the year of the 'Moo' has been marked by a number of significant events. President Kennedy has been assassinated, and the country has been left reeling. The Cold War has continued to escalate, and the country has been torn by political and social unrest.

In the year of the 'Moo,' the world has been in flux, and many believe that this year will be a turning point for the world. It is a time of great change, and many believe that this year will be a time of great opportunity. The world has been in turmoil, and many believe that this year will be a time of great change.

Ohio State’s all-purpose backfield group again emerged as the major threat in college football’s National Championship race when it won the Iron Bowl Saturday and captured the Big Ten title.

The Buckeyes, led by quarterback Pat Dye and running backs Orson Welles and Bob Purcell, outscored Alabama 28-14 in the annual meeting between the two teams, who were the only ones to upset Ohio State this season.

The Buckeyes now have the edge in the race for the Big Ten title, which they have won for the past three seasons. Ohio State will play Indiana in the Big Ten title game, while Alabama will face Michigan in the Residential Bowl.

Ohio State leads the Big Ten in rushing, scoring, and total offense. The Buckeyes have outscored their opponents 84-17 this season.
