"I'll think about it." — was what Jackie Kennedy usually said to her brother-in-law, Robert S. Mc纳马拉, when he pressed her to run for Congress in 1966. She later confided to a friend, "It's a lot of fun to say no.

The famous first lady's response was typical of the way she dealt with difficult personal and political problems, whether in her daily life in the White House or in her role as a public figure. But even as her personal problems multiplied, Jackie Kennedy continued to be a force for good in politics and society. Her ability to transcend personal issues and focus on the larger picture made her a role model for generations of women.

Jackie's influence extended beyond the White House. As an advocate for the arts and education, she helped bring attention to the importance of these areas. She was a patron of the arts, and her personal collection of paintings and photographs was widely admired. Her interest in the arts was not just a matter of personal taste, but a reflection of her belief in the power of culture to shape society. Jackie was a powerful force for change, and her legacy continues to inspire others to use their influence for the greater good.

For more information on Jackie Kennedy, visit the official White House website or explore the extensive archives and resources available on the Internet.
ABA Reaffirms Opposition
To Treaty banning Genocide

COLUMBUS, Ga. - The American Bar Association (ABA) reaffirmed its opposition to the ban on genocide treaty in the United Nations. The vote came after a two-day hearing by the ABA on a proposal to incorporate the ban into its own constitution.

The vote was taken under a rule that allows for rapid ratification of certain resolutions by the ABA, which is the leading body of lawyers in the United States.

The ABA president, John A. Nance, said the ban was consistent with the ABA's traditional position on individual liberties.

"This is not a treaty that restricts the freedom of speech," Nance said. "It's a treaty that says we will not recognize the right of governments to commit genocide."

Teachers Abandon Kentucky Schools

THE DAILY IOWAN

WANT ADS

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Teachers at three Kentucky schools were abandoning their desks to protest a state proposal that would swell to $700 million in a year, with $100 million of that coming from classroom teachers.

The Kentucky Education Association (KEA) said its members would start walking off the job next week in response to state budget negotiations.

KEA President Debby Allendorf said the move was part of a larger effort to protect public education and was designed to force the state to increase funding for schools.

"We're tired of waiting," Allendorf said. "We're tired of seeing our students suffer because of budget cuts.

A list of the three schools included: Louisville South Academy, Louisville Central High School, and Louisville Western High School.

KEA claimed that the teachers were on strike for "a lack of communication" between teachers and administrators.

The Kentucky Education Association (KEA) is the state’s largest teacher’s union.

Placards attacking the school board and Republican state legislators were seen around the city.

The state has been dealing with a budget crisis, which has led to cuts in many areas of government, including education.

"Our students deserve better," Allendorf said. "They deserve to be educated in safe and well-funded schools.

In response, the state’s education commissioner said he was "disappointed" by the teachers' actions.

"We’re working hard to balance the budget," said Tim Keen, the state’s education commissioner. "Teachers need to understand that we’re doing everything we can to protect their jobs.

The announcement came as the state’s budget crisis continues to grow worse, with cuts expected in many areas of government.

"We’re not going to give up," Allendorf said. "We’re going to continue to fight for our students and our schools."

do two things:

- we pay hospital and doctor bills, and we worry about you.

- We worry about people who are not allowed to keep adequate coverage after they leave group protection where they worked.

- Much of the time, that's when they need protection most. A lot of people lose jobs for health reasons, and once their former time to leave them high and dry.

- We've worried about that ever since we started safeguarding people against health care expenses. From the very beginning we've made it possible for people to have protection after they leave a Blue Cross and Blue Shield group. That's been a blessing to thousands of our fellow Iowans.

- If we were not to make a profit, we probably wouldn't feel this way. Because we are non-profit organizations, we can do a lot of those things for people. And, we do.

- There's a big difference in Blue Cross and Blue Shield, and the difference makes it better.
