Neely Tows Iowa Drug Traffic ‘Public Menace’

Iowa City’s Senate Finance Committee on Thursday took up a bill to increase penalties for dealing in illegal drugs. The bill, which was introduced by Sen. Bruce Rennie, D-Dubuque, would make it a first-degree felony to possess or sell more than 250 grams of a controlled substance, carrying a sentence of up to 20 years in prison.

The committee heard testimony from law enforcement officials, including police officers and district attorneys. They testified that the current penalties for drug offenses were not sufficient to deter drug dealers.

Sen. Rennie said that the bill was necessary to protect the public from the dangers posed by drug dealers. He said that the bill was supported by law enforcement officials throughout the state.

The bill was passed by the Senate Finance Committee and will now be sent to the full Senate for consideration. It is expected to be voted on in the next few weeks.

Liberating women

BECK WOOLWORTH

NEW YORK

One of the most revolutionary things that has to be dealt with in the women's liberation movement is the treatment of women in a school. Liberation of women has to be taken as a library, for the first time in the history of the world, is to be used by the women. Therefore, the movement for women's liberation should be made more visible. If you are interested in women's liberation, you have to begin by being a reader of the Daily.

Well, the women are right. They say that nothing is right and that the women's liberation movement is a waste of time. They say that the women's liberation movement is a waste of time and that the women's liberation movement is a waste of time.

But, to be honest, I believe in the Women's Liberation Movement.

We have something to tell you.

We’ve found that many of the women and mothers have high school reports, but Q8B often doesn’t. Now there seems to have been some kind of attack in the area, which led to the arrest of a prominent citizen. However, the attack seems to have been accidental, not targeted personally.

When asked if the attack felt like a targeted increase in the number of drug-related incidents, the University spokesperson was careful to refrain from linking the attack directly to drug use, stating merely that the university had taken measures to ensure the safety of its community. However, it is clear that the attack has caused a stir in the community, with residents expressing concern about the possibility of increased drug activity in the area.

In response to the increased threat, the University has implemented new security measures, including increased patrols and the deployment of additional security personnel.

The University also encourages community members to report any suspicious activity to the authorities.

Impasse Reached in Talks About Insurance Coverages

Negotiations on insurance coverage for employees of the Iowa City Community School District remained in a deadlock today, as the Iowa City Education Association (ICEA) and the Iowa City Community School District (ICSD) continued to debate the terms of the insurance plan.

The current impasse is due to the fact that the ICEA and the ICSD are at odds over the cost of the insurance plan. The ICEA is insistent on securing a plan that is fair to all employees, while the ICSD is more focused on maintaining their financial stability.

The impasse has caused concern among parents and students, as many are worried about the impact this could have on the quality of education in the district.

Campaign Trail

Currently, the school district faces a number of insurance challenges, and the current negotiations are just one of the many issues that must be addressed.

Prince Accused of Murder—Assembly Blasts Sihankouh

BANGKOK, Thailand — Cambodia's National Assembly accused Prince Norodom Sihamouk of murdering his wife last week, but the royal family denied the charges.

The debate came in response to a motion in the assembly, held at the request of the opposition Cambodia National Rescue Party, which is calling for an independent investigation into the death of Princess Phnom Penh, a 30-year-old princess who was found dead in her apartment in the capital on Thursday.

Sihamouk, 29, has been the focus of speculation for days, with many in Cambodia wondering if he is capable of such an act.

The assembly voted 118-0 to hold an inquiry into the death, but Sihamouk and his supporters quickly dismissed the allegations, saying they were politically motivated.

Although Sihamouk has not yet been formally charged, thePopular Front, a once-mighty political force that was recently dissolved by the government, has called for a referendum on the issue.

Meanwhile, Cambodia's main opposition party, the Cambodia National Rescue Party, announced it would begin a nationwide protest campaign on Saturday, demanding a full investigation into the death of Princess Phnom Penh and transparency in the justice system.

Cambodians said they were shocked by the death of the young princess, who had been a beloved figure in the country and a symbol of hope for the future of Cambodia.

Sihamouk, who has been a controversial figure since taking over as Cambodia's leader in 1993, has been accused of corruption, human rights abuses, and crackdowns on dissent.

He is also accused of involvement in the deadly Khmer Rouge conflict that killed an estimated 1.7 million people.

The opposition has long criticized Sihamouk's government, saying it has failed to deliver on its promise of peace and reconciliation.

Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen, a close ally of Sihamouk, has defended his government, saying it is working hard to improve living conditions for the people.

But many in Cambodia are skeptical, and the opposition's calls for an end to corruption and human rights abuses continue to resonate.

In a statement, the opposition leader Sam Rainsy said the government should be held accountable for the death of Princess Phnom Penh and that the case should be handled transparently.

"All Cambodians are deeply shocked by this tragic event," Rainsy said. "The government must ensure that justice is served, and that all those responsible are held accountable.

The assembly also voted to set up a special committee to investigate the princess's death, with members from both the government and opposition parties.

The opposition has called for international involvement in the probe, saying it is too close to Sihamouk's inner circle to be impartial.

Meanwhile, Prince Norodom Sihanouk, the country's former king, has broken his silence, saying he is satisfied with the way the case is being handled.

The government has said it is working closely with the opposition to ensure that justice is served.

Meanwhile, protests continue to grow, with thousands of Cambodians taking to the streets in recent days to demand transparency and accountability.

Sihamouk has denied all allegations, saying he is innocent and that the government is seeking to blame him for the公主's death.

The princess's death has also reignited calls for a change in the government, with many in Cambodia demanding free and fair elections and an end to corruption.

But Sihamouk has said he will not step down, saying he is working hard to improve living conditions for the people.

The government has also said it is committed to carrying out a full investigation into the princess's death, and that all those responsible will be held accountable.
