

Election Protested; Board Halts Tally

By DIANA GOLDENBERG

Results of Wednesday's campus elections will not be released until protests on voting procedures filed Wednesday by three students have been considered by Judicial Board, the Board decided at a meeting Wednesday night.

The ballots will be counted, but the totals will not be compiled or released until Judicial Board gives permission to do so.

The protests were filed by Student Body Pres. Phil Dantes; Jerry North, A2, Goshen, N.Y., a presidential candidate; and Al Parrish, L3, Camden, Ala., president of the Iowa Student Bar Association.

Dantes said that he received information that poll watchers were not telling students that spaces to vote on Student Publications, Inc. Board candidates and on the referendum question were on the back of the ballot.

Dantes claimed that "three and one-half hours in Iowa Memorial Union" and for an unknown amount of time at polls in Schaeffer Hall and in Phillips Hall, "poll watchers did not inform people that vote information was on the back side of the ballot."

Dantes said that if there is a discrepancy between the total number of votes cast and the number votes cast on the back page's two questions, another vote on the two questions should be considered.

Dantes also said that he had leafed through 150 ballots Wednesday night and that of these, 63 had not voted on the back.

Dantes presented his protest to Election Board Wednesday afternoon.

No Election Board members were present at the Judicial Board meeting

Wednesday night because Election Board was hand counting the ballots.

Randy Stephenson, A3, Des Moines, who said that he was speaking for Election Board Chairman Dave Miller, A2, Wilmette, Ill., said that Miller agreed that "if a wide discrepancy between the total number of votes and referendum votes occurs, then another ballot will be held."

North charged that the most flagrant violation of the campaign was the ballot counting by Election Board. North said that election rules state that ballots shall be counted by an independent agency and claimed Election Board doesn't meet this criterion. Earlier in the campaign, Election Board had ruled that it considered itself an independent agency.

North protested that balloting places were not established within a "reasonable distance of the Law and Medical Colleges." He also charged that poll watchers marked ballots, not allowing some students to vote for candidates whom they were qualified to vote for and allowing students to vote for candidates whom they were not qualified to vote for.

North also claimed that Election Board failed to give sufficient notice of a change in polling places and that "poll watchers have either not been correctly instructed in procedure or have not followed those instructions either through ignorance or intent."

Because of these things, North said he urged that "the ballots now recorded be destroyed without count under any circumstances."

Polling places were officially announced by Election Board at 10 Tuesday night and appeared in Wednesday's Daily Iowan.

Stephenson said that Miller felt the announcement of polling places was given sufficiently early and that polling places were close enough to the Law and Medical Colleges.

The Daily Iowan was unable to contact Miller late Wednesday for confirmation of Stephenson's statements.

Presidential candidates present at the Judicial meeting were asked whether they had been informed by Election Board of the changes in polling places. Candidate Jerry Sies, corresponding student, Iowa City, said that he had been informed by Sharon Rabkin, A2, Brooklyn, N.Y., election board member, of the Board's decision. Candidate Dean Stolne, A3, Norwalk, said, "I was there, but no one informed me." North said, "Everybody at (Tuesday's) meeting at Burge was informed, but this was for constituents not candidates."

Each of the three students made his protests known to Election Board Wednesday, and were appealing to Judicial Board for a ruling on their protests.

Judicial Board agreed to hear all three cases at separate meetings today. John Wunder, G, Dysart, Judicial Board member, said that he did not know when the Board would have a ruling.

Judicial Board is a committee of five students selected last fall to hear appeals from other student committees, including Election Board.

More My Lai Charges

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — Three more Army enlisted men were charged with murder Wednesday in connection with the alleged 1968 massacre at My Lai, South Vietnam.

An Army spokesman at Ft. McPherson, headquarters for the 3rd Army, identified the three as Spec. William F. Doherty of Readville, Mass., Cpl. Kenneth Schiel of Swarts Creek, Mich., and Spec. 4 Robert W. T'Souvas of San Jose, Calif.

The spokesman said Doherty, 21, Schiel, 22, and T'Souvas, 20, have each been charged with one count of murder.

Although the Army did not give details, it said the charges "arose from events which allegedly occurred at or near My Lai" while the three men were serving with the Americal Division in Vietnam, "on or about March 16, 1968."

Bomb Laws Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon, reacting to the wave of recent bombings, asked Congress Wednesday to crack down on "potential murderers" with stiff federal laws including the death penalty.

"The anarchic and criminal elements who perpetrate such acts deserve no more patience or indulgence," the President declared. "It is time to deal with them for what they are."

Nixon proposed making it a federal crime to possess or use explosives to damage or destroy property or buildings of the federal government or persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce.

The severest penalties, ranging from 20 years in prison and $20,000 fines to the death penalty, could be invoked where injuries or deaths result from unlawful use or transport of explosives.

Penalties for bomb threats would be increased from one year in prison to a maximum of five years and $5,000 fine.

Postal Talks Begin

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ranking officials of the federal government and the postal unions opened negotiations Wednesday to try to settle issues that led to breakdowns of the mail service.

Two hours after the meeting started at the headquarters of a national union, the negotiators sent out word that the discussions were going forward in an "atmosphere that is friendly and constructive."

The statement which came from the closed conference room said that the negotiators had engaged "in a frank exchange of views and that the parties have agreed not to publicly discuss any details at this time."

An aide to Secretary of Labor George P. Shultz told newsmen the reason for the secrecy is that "the purpose of this meeting is to reach an accord."

Railroad Strike Averted

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiators for the railroads and the holdout sheet metal workers union agreed Wednesday to avert a nationwide railroad strike.

J. P. Hiltz Jr., chief management negotiating and John W. O'Brien, general vice president of the AFL-CIO Sheet Metal Workers International Association agreed to meet for negotiations during the Easter Congressional recess.

Chairman Harley D. Staggers (D-W. Va.), of the House Commerce Committee, set an April 7 deadline for a settlement before his committee would have to write a law to avert a strike April 11, when the current moratorium expires.

Counting

Bob Shaw, A3, Des Moines, a member of Elections Board, prepares to count the ballots from Wednesday's student election. But Student Judicial Board ordered Elections Board not to tally the results until protests about the election could be heard.

Controllers Halt Flights, Ordered Back to Work

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government obtained a court order Wednesday to get the nation's air traffic controllers back to work, claiming the first day of the controllers' "sick calls" halted operations of 900 aircraft at airports in 15 major cities.

Attorney F. Lee Bailey, executive director of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization (PATCO), said he would tell his people that this "is a valid order of the court and they should comply with it."

The absenteeism which started with the day shift at 8 a.m., grew worse for the 4 p.m. shift.

The result was delays and wholesale cancellations, especially for flights originating or terminating at New York City's three main airports. The tangle there affected air travel across the country.

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) said about one third of the country's controllers (474 out of 1,577) did not show up for work on the day shift.

Delays of two hours were not uncommon as the FAA imposed stringent regulations on spacing of airplanes. On the Boston to New York leg, there were delays of up to four hours.

U. S. District Judge Matthew F. McGuire issued a temporary restraining order against PATCO, ordering that there be no "continuing, encouraging, ordering, aiding, engaging or taking any part in any work stoppage or slowdown."

"The order tells us not to encourage a strike," Bailey said. "We didn't encourage a strike."

He insisted the controllers are not on strike and, as to what would happen now: "I suspect they will continue their period of respite."

PATCO, which claims to represent 7,500 of the 14,000 air traffic cops that guide planes once they are out of airport control, has been in a continuing dispute with the government over wages, a shortage of help and improvement of equipment. The rash of absenteeism was prompted by the proposed transfer of three men from Baton Rouge, La.

In Minneapolis, 6 of 31 showed up for the evening shift. In Chicago it was 85 of 133; in Cleveland, 83 of 132; in Kansas City, 36 of 63 and Miami 38 of 60. Albuquerque, Boston, Fort Worth, Houston, and Indianapolis had nearly normal work forces. There was no shortage in the nation's 350 airport control towers.

Pentagon Says Marijuana Causing 'Serious Drug Problem' in Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — A top Pentagon official said Wednesday "a very serious drug problem" has developed among U.S. troops in Vietnam because marijuana is cheap, plentiful and easy to get there.

"It's a very bad situation," Vice Adm. William Mack told a news conference.

At the same time, Asst. Secretary of Defense Daniel Z. Henkin said an Army investigation "developed no evidence that any member of the units engaged in the Son My operation was under the coties."

Defense officials discussed the drug problem — which they said had been escalated by the Vietnam war — after a Senate Juvenile Delinquency Subcommittee heard testimony linking members of an outfit involved in the alleged My Lai-Son My massacres with mari-

City OKs Research On Housing

By TOM ISENHART

The Iowa City Housing Commission has received the green light from the City Council to research the possibility of establishing a non-profit housing corporation for Iowa City.

Rev. Robert Welsh, commission chairman, said at a commission meeting Wednesday that the City Council approved plans to seek additional information concerning the formation of such a corporation.

Welsh said the information included a summary of plans available, the effect on other programs, budget and tax implications and what needs will be met.

The commission moved to contact organizations and cities where similar plans are now in effect to seek answers to its questions.

Welsh said he would write to Urban America, a national unit that provides information about non-profit housing corporations, and the National Association of Non-profit Housing Organization.

He also said that Omaha has a non-profit housing corporation and that he would also contact them to see if they had additional information. The commission hopes to bring a representative from Omaha to discuss that city's plan with local officials.

Commission member Richard Gibson said he felt the commission needed to provide housing specifically for the elderly, in addition to the current low-rent housing program.

The Leasing-23 low-rent housing program is the program currently administered by the Housing Commission and Iowa City Housing Coordinator Lyle Seydel.

Under the Leasing-23 program, the city rents apartment units of various sizes and then sub-leases them to eligible low-income families in Iowa City.

The difference between the city's rental fee and the contribution made by the tenant is subsidized by federal funds available through the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

Welsh said that the only low-rent housing program that can legally be administered by the housing commission is the Leasing-23 program.

A non-profit housing corporation could provide a variety of housing styles and sizes under several federal programs, he said.

Welsh said that if the non-profit housing corporation were established, existing sub-standard housing could be rehabilitated and made available for use in the Leasing-23 program.

juana smoking.

The testimony, by former Army Sgt. Charles West, 23, of Chicago, was disputed Wednesday by the ex-GI who first reported the My Lai incident.

"It is my opinion from everything I know about My Lai that the use of marijuana was in no way a contributing factor," Ronald L. Ridenhour told a reporter.

Admiral Mack, who is deputy assistant secretary of defense, did not touch on the My Lai incident in telling newsmen that military investigators have turned up 1,995 proven users of marijuana and 252 users of other narcotics. Most of these were in Vietnam, he said.

Mack said he had no information as to how drug use might have affected combat operations, but he replied "absolutely" when asked whether marijuana has caused bad conduct.

Nixon Statement On Civil Rights Draws Criticism

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some civil right lawyers contended Wednesday ambiguities in President Nixon's school statement threatened to slow or even halt desegregation enforcement in the South.

They said several of his new enforcement principles could work against the President's vow Tuesday that official or de jure school desegregation "must be eliminated root and branch — and it must be eliminated at once."

Nixon said in his desegregation policy statement:

- He will divert $500 million from other parts of his fiscal 1971 budget to help pay costs of court-ordered desegregation and to upgrade education in "racially impacted areas." A sum of $1 billion will be budgeted for that purpose in fiscal 1972.

- The administration will not force school districts to adopt busing plans to end racial segregation unless ordered by the courts.

- School systems throughout the country must move immediately to end racial segregation of teachers.

- The administration will insist on an end to de jure segregation — segregation caused by discriminatory laws or practices — without insisting on an end to de facto segregation — segregation caused by housing patterns.

- Desegregation policies will be pursued with equal vigor in the North as well as the South.

- The government will not attempt to establish an "arbitrary" racial balance in the nation's school systems.

- In communities where racial imbalance in schools is a result of housing patterns, the government will attempt to upgrade the educational quality of predominantly black schools.

- School districts acting in good faith to end de jure segregation and under court desegregation orders will be allowed latitude in considering cost, capacity and convenience for pupils and parents in drawing up desegregation plans.

- Schools will not be expected to achieve "the kind of a multiracial society which the adult community has failed to achieve for itself."

Nixon's hands-off policy toward school desegregation arising from housing patterns in southern cities which once had dual segregation systems, his reliance on good-faith desegregation efforts by local officials rather than stiff federal proddings and the injunction against busing "beyond normal geographic school zones" to achieve racial balance were particularly criticized.

"While the over-all tone of the statement is one of support for desegregation, it retains, from a law enforcement point of view, all of the confusion, the ambiguities and the contradictions that have for the last 12 months hampered effective and strong compliance efforts in this area," said Leon E. Panetta. "In the end, every requirement is qualified, every requirement is distorted and every pledge is limited."

Panetta was ousted by the White House last month as civil rights chief of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) for alleged excessive zeal in enforcing desegregation.

Sies Is Charged With Obstruction By Campus Cop

Student body presidential candidate Jerry Sies, corresponding student, Iowa City, was arrested Wednesday night and charged with obstructing an officer after an incident in the Union.

Sies was arrested by Sgt. Ralph Moody of the Campus Police and taken to the Iowa City police station where he was released on $100 bond.

According to Moody, Sies was arrested after he interfered with Moody's removing an alleged vagrant from the Union. Moody said he was called to the Union by the night manager who reported a vagrant on the premises.

Moody said he was walking out of the building with the alleged vagrant when Sies came up and demanded to see his credentials. Sies said he wanted to check to see if Moody had the power to arrest the man.

Sies said later that he had also asked what the man was being charged with and did not get an answer. Sies said vagrancy was only mentioned in the car after he was arrested.

Sies said he wanted to know if Moody was deputized because if he wasn't, he could be charged with assault.

Moody said he was not attempting to arrest the man, but to remove him from the Union and "Sies got in my way."

Sies said he might have gotten between the alleged vagrant and Moody, but he wasn't sure.

According to witnesses, a small scuffle occurred and Sies was arrested by Moody and taken out of the building to a squad-car. The alleged vagrant walked away and has not been identified.

Sies' running mate, Michael Seydel, corresponding student, Iowa City, was present when Sies was arrested and said he may press charges against Moody for assault. Sies and Seydel say they have not seen Moody's credentials and do not know if he has the power to arrest Sies.

A brief theology of Holy Communion

A guest editorial

Tonight the churches of Western Christendom observe "Maundy Thursday," in commemoration of the institution of the Sacrament of Holy Communion by Jesus with his disciples the night before his subsequent crucifixion.

In nearly all the liturgies used now for the Sacrament, there is a repetition of Jesus' words over the bread and the cup of wine which was used at that primordial meal: "... This is my body... this is my blood of the covenant..." Not only are these words repeated as part of the liturgy, they are also used as a distribution formula in many churches: As the priest or pastor gives the bread he says "The Body of Christ given for you" or to that effect.

As one involved in these activities, I am always aware that to the casual outsider, the non-initiate, so to speak, these phrases must sound really weird. To be blunt, they must sound like cannibalism is being practiced. They must sound ghastly, even revolting.

The question is obvious, then: how can presumably intelligent people participate in such proceedings?

Lest anyone think the issue here is a new one, it should be observed that similar repugnance on the part of observers over the sacramental practices of the Christians in the 1st century is part of the historical record. They were accused of practicing mad, cannibalistic rites, of "eating the god."

The answer to these accusations will vary among Christian theorists today, as it has almost from the beginning of the Christian movement. What follows represents an attempt at a position mediating between the "objectivism" of traditional Catholicism on the one hand and the so-called "mere symbolism" of much Protestantism on the other.

First of all, no Christian participant in Communion has ever taken Jesus' word about the Bread literally, strictly speaking. We know very well that Jesus did not pass out pieces of his leg, arm, torso or face as he said "This is my body."

Yet in an effort to take him seriously, if not literally, the theology of the Church developed in such a way that the initiated were able to hear that phrase as they received and distributed bread as though Christ's "body" was in some real way being shared by them; there was recurring rejection of the common-sense assertion, made by various thinkers over the years and centuries, that the bread only represented the Body of Christ.

In the 16th century, when parties formed in European Christianity, (we now call them "churches" or denominations), a sacramental theology was developed among many other things in the writings of Luther and his followers which attempts the "mediating position." As I read it, these would be the primary concerns:

1. The words "Body" and "Blood" of Christ must be taken to mean "His special presence."

2. The act of Jesus with his disciples brings us into the realm of the non-rational, the "mysterious" in the strict sense; that means that all efforts to provide complete conceptual understanding of the relationship between the bread and wine and his special presence are doomed to failure; after all our theology is said and done, we remain involved in a mystery.

3. It is a mistake to make either the English verb "is" or the Latin "est" in Christ's phrases the key elements in sacramental theology; Jesus undoubtedly spoke not in either English or Latin — both precise, "Western" languages — but in Aramaic, a variation of Hebrew, an Oriental-type language, which doesn't even use a copulative verb in the sentence or phrase which we must translate into English or Latin with a verb.

4. Rather the key concept today is that of "sign," meaning the bread and wine are mysteriously invested with the power of making known to us the Lord's presence in a decisive way. They are "revelatory signs" as used in the Christian movement; in their absence, one may understand that God is the ground of Being and is "here" in the most abstract sense; but when bread and wine are used "in" accordance with the Christ's creative action-word, one accepts that He, Christ, the God-bearer is dynamically "here" as Grace-filled presence of the Grace-full God: not "here" for examination, not "in" or "with" or "under" the elements, but "present-for-me" specifically that I may live in fuller communion with Him and my brothers and sisters here and all over the world and through time past and future as well.

Perhaps it's all rather well summed up in a bit of low-grade poetry carved at the foot of the pulpit in the Church of Walton on Thames, England:

Christ was the Word and spake it;
 He took the bread and brake it;
 And what that Word doth make it,
 That I believe and take it.

The compleat angle

—By Walton

Living in a shadow is hard on the eyes. Friending with a criminal is nervous business. I have new respect for Sinatra and Phyllis McGuire.

I have an acquaintance whose Hershey heart cannot tolerate the untimely demise of a kitchen cockroach without driving her into full-blown hysterics, and this gentle soul is the object of a hard-core woman hunt. Iowa City police have a dragnet out for her the likes of which hasn't been known since the days when the blue-coats were still keeping their eyes peeled for Joe Bananas.

My friend has yet to get her auto license plates in living color. She's still driving around in black-and-white.

She says she objects to the '70 Iowa plates because they're white and fire engine red and they'd clash with her yellow convertible. "You know what they say about 'red and yellow, catch a fellow,'" she explains. "Well, I certainly don't want to be THAT obvious!" "Besides, the old plates aren't worn out yet." She now has more tickets than the box office of "Kelly" the morning after opening night. She has so many citations, she makes Audie Murphy look like a draft-dodger.

Her friends worry about her. One concerned gentleman, convinced that she didn't realize the seriousness of her situation, warned her gently that, "If you don't get your new license plates soon, they may take your driver's license away."

"Ha! Fat chance!" she laughed smugly. "I don't HAVE a driver's license!"

She does in fact have a driver's license, she told me later. It's of a vintage that would be very good if you could drink it. She says she keeps it because it's an out-of-state license and when she gets stopped by traffic policemen, they are always nicer to her because they think she's a tourist.

Because she's a fairly capable driver, she rarely got stopped by policemen before.

Now she's lucky to get half a block. I haven't seen an organization so concerned about expiration since Forest Lawn opened their new plot.

They get as worked up over plates as a new bride in a china shop.

My friend isn't the only motorist being nabbed for expired plates, of course, I knew that when I saw one of the city's finest adding another notch to his ever-sharp pencil. But she's probably the only one who rolls her window down to cops who say, "Well hello again! How have you been?"

Her last ticket had a note attached which read, "Don't bother to drop off all these envelopes separately. We'll send a Brink's truck."

If the police department only gave green stamps with the payment of fines, my friend could redeem them for a new car, and for a few days at least, the fuzzi wouldn't spot her so quickly.

She's tired of the game now though, and yesterday she took steps to acquire red and white license plates, regardless of how they mismatch her color scheme. She found an old bottle of red polish she bought for her toenails the last time she was in Lauderdale and went to work. She has the only Iowa plates around in Flamata Pearl.

She says the plates took to the lacquer well enough, and the lustre isn't bad. Only problem is, when she drives through puddles or rain, she has to put rubber gloves on the plates.

My friend really and truly does have her legal plates and license in order now. No one need accuse me of railing on a girl, labeling her for the police, turning her in. I don't blow the whistle on my comrades. Our relationship means fathoms more to me than any wisecrack column.

Besides which, if she ever told one of those traffic cops about the grass in my herb garden, I'd be making her license plates personally.

College of Dentistry

To the Editor:

For WHOM does the College of Dentistry exist? Recently, two misunderstandings have occurred at the Dental College involving University students. The College of Dentistry does not exist primarily to serve the University student. True, the University student makes up a significant percentage of the dental patients; he receives equally fine dental care. However, many other patients, non-students from Iowa and Illinois, also receive treatment at the Dental College. These patients comprise the majority under treatment.

The College of Dentistry, unlike other colleges which comprise the University of Iowa, is a relatively self-sustaining spoke in a subsidized wheel. Therefore, it is imperative that the College rely heavily on excellent public relations and efficient practice management.

All persons who wish to become patients are required to have a complete oral examination, radiographic and clinical, as well as a complete diagnosis and treatment plan. This is tremendously important if the College is going to treat and provide the best possible care effectively and efficiently.

The first incident took place when a student, who was not a patient at the College, requested that a single, minor dental procedure be performed. The receptionist explained to the student that due to the heavy appointment schedule this type of preferential treatment could not be performed.

If the student sincerely desired care, it would be necessary to have the preliminary examinations before treatment could proceed. The student obviously did not understand this explanation and resorted to campus politics to achieve treatment. Is this any way for an "adult" to conduct himself?

The second incident occurred when another student again requested treatment for a single, minor dental procedure. He received the same adequate explanation from the College receptionist. He also resorted to campus politics and even threatened to call the University attorney to obtain treatment. Is this any way for an "adult" to conduct himself?

The College of Dentistry has provided three dental students at any one time during the day and an Oral Surgery resident during the evening to handle all emergency patients, i.e., those patients suffering from acutely infected teeth and post-operative discomfort. If any patient or non-patient is experiencing severe pain, he can be treated immediately.

Maybe these qualifications seem quite limited in scope. This is not true. These "emergency men" may see as many as thirty patients per day. If the above students had their way, it would mean that other persons who present acute dental pain emergencies, would have to wait while these two routine dental procedures — involving approximately two hours — were performed. This obviously compromises priorities.

I hope I have explained the situation as it exists for these gentlemen and that further misunderstandings do not recur. Situations such as these do nothing but create animosity between University students and the College of Dentistry, something we of the Dental College sincerely do not want.

The myth

To the Editor:

A small group of people in a population of 20,000 organizes a mythical government. It persuades 10 per cent of the population to believe in it by making various vague promises to them. That 10 per cent decides which people will fill in the roles which, together, make up the "government structure."

Then, a tax is levied by this representative government on the entire population, the revenues from which are to be spent at the pleasure of the "officials" or to be kept by such "officials" and called "salaries."

What kind of crap is this? It may be, time for all 20,000 of us to re-examine the myth. Much as I dislike agreeing with Diana Goldenberg, I suggest this fairly tale would find better use as a poor example in a government class than as an expensive game.

Free speech

To the Editor:

There seems to be a group of persons on this campus bent on destroying freedom of expression and free speech. They are the ones who mutilate, vandalize, and destroy the legally-posted campaign materials for candidates for office.

Evidently this group is displaying some sort of violent reaction against either student elections or individual candidates. In Rienow II, it's obviously an individual candidate that the vandalism is directed against.

It's too bad that these strong-willed partisans don't have the guts to come out publicly and voice their dissatisfactions. I guess they find self-fulfillment in the undemocratic, fascist tactics of denying free expression to certain candidates.

I'm sure that if anyone who proves his intelligence through this "secret" form of "protest" is willing to publicly defend their actions, a lot of people might be interested in what he says.

Communion in court

To the Editor:

Last week I was in Milwaukee for the beginning of the trial of Mike Collins, one of the Milwaukee 14. The coolest Christian cat in the courtroom was Mike. His countenance shown like a bright light with his inner peace, joy, and humor breaking through to those who would only look. He was beautiful and strengthening to behold.

The jury of Milwaukeeans was being picked that day. City-wide sympathy was evident cuz that beginning day of the trial was also the first of many days that MILWAUKEE RESIST agitated and are still agitating for draft resistance.

During the morning at recess and at noon, Mike walked out to the concerned people in the hallways waiting to get into the courtroom one by one (only 84 spectators are permitted) pulled a flat round load of rye (?) bread from a cloth bag, broke off pieces, and passed them to his committed friends.

Wow! Incredible! INTERBANG! That's what I call COMMUNION IN THE COURT.

Now, will understanding, justice, and mercy reign; or will injustice and shame have another day?

To those with mini-minds: Communion in the court is nothing like order in the court.

Endorsement

To the Editor:

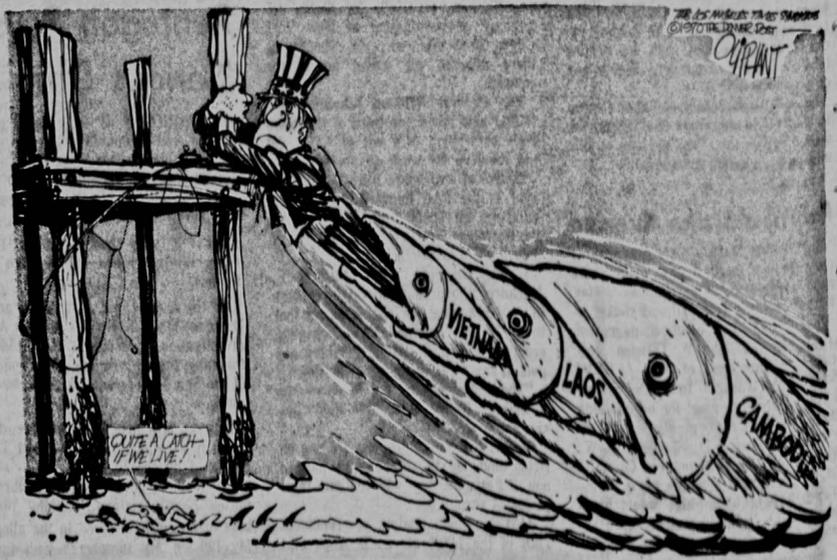

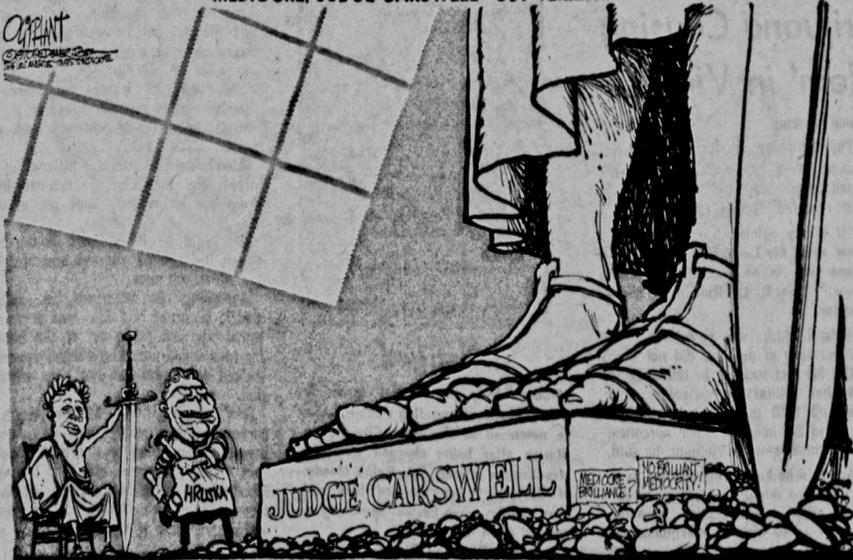

I wish to express my regret that my name appeared on an endorsement for Jerrold Sies for student body president in Wednesday's Daily Iowan. I do not believe that faculty members have any business endorsing individual students for student offices; I therefore refrain from making any further comment on the qualifications or lack thereof of Sies or any student for student offices.

'MEDIocre, JUDGE CARSWELL—BUT TERRIFIC!'

Ray's Budget Adjustments Scheduled for Senate Review

DES MOINES (AP) — The Iowa Senate will consider Gov. Robert Ray's $17.9 million budget adjustment proposals early next week, Majority Leader Robert Rigler (D-New Hampton) said Wednesday.

Rigler emerged from a Republican caucus to tell newsmen he was "quite optimistic" that the Senate would approve Ray's controversial proposal.

Generating the most heat since the plan was unveiled last week was a recommendation that $10 million be diverted from the road use tax fund, a nearly untouchable cache of money usually used by the Highway Commission to construct, maintain and supervise highways.

Sen. Francis Messerly (R-Cedar Falls) as chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, received the task of preparing a bill to implement Ray's budget adjustments. Several Democrats contacted before the GOP caucus ended correctly predicted the outcome of the caucus but said they saw little chance of the Senate's enacting the entire Ray budget package.

They noted that some Republicans, especially Sen. Clifton Lamborn (R-Maquoketa) have consistently voted to protect the sanctity of road funds.

Rigler said the caucus of Republicans — who control the Senate 44-17 — did not advocate any significant changes in Ray's proposal.

Rigler, questioned about the furor over high and rising property taxes, said the caucus decided to provide "some encouragement and guidance" to local school districts in order to help them hold down costs.

Some Republicans, however, are convinced that legislative encouragement and guidance will do no good for the pocketbooks of taxpayers. One, Sen. Quentin Anderson (R-Beaconsfield) said that "a state of emergency" should be declared.

Anderson has frequently criticized some Department of Public Instruction regulations that require schools to hire administrators beyond the number he thinks they need.

At least one portion of Ray's budget proposal is reported dying. If not dead, that was the proposal to issue drivers' licenses for four year periods instead of two, an action that would result in a wind-fall estimated as high as $3 million. The House killed that bill this week.

The Senate will consider the Ray proposals to provide $7.2 million for the sewage disposal facilities; $5 million for property tax relief for the elderly; and $3.2 million for old age assistance.

About $1 million of the $17.9 million Ray says he hopes to gain by shifting funds would go to nursing homes to increase the state's share in the cost of caring for welfare patients by $30 per month.

Optimist Club Gives Award To Connell

Phil Connell, assistant to University Pres. Willard Boyd, received an award for outstanding service at a testimonial luncheon of the Iowa City Optimist Club Wednesday.

The award consisted of a plaque and a list of the Optimist Club positions Connell has held. He also received a bound volume of letters from Optimists in the United States and Canada.

Connell will be moving to Columbia, Mo., in June to assume the position of assistant to the president of the University of Missouri.

Connell has been a member of the Optimist Club since 1951. He was vice-president of the club from 1956 to 1958; president from 1958 to 1959, and Lieutenant Governor of Optimist District 35, including Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, and Manitoba, Canada, from 1960 to 1961.

The New York Stock Exchange was active Wednesday, and this was the scene a few minutes after noon when the market soared after a long-awaited cutback in interest rates. Wholesale Price Rate Shows Smallest Rise in 7 Months

WASHINGTON (AP) — The smallest wholesale price rise in seven months gave President Nixon Wednesday a glimmer of evidence that his economic policies are beginning to cool the nation's inflationary spiral.

A preliminary Labor Department report said that March wholesale prices edged up only one-tenth of one per cent on the average for a broad range of foods and industrial raw materials.

"For two consecutive months now the Wholesale Price Index has demonstrated slower rates of advance," said the government's chief price analyst, Dr. Joel Popkin.

"Another factor that seems to be of significance is that there was no increase in prices of consumer financed goods," said Popkin, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Consumer financed goods, along with wholesale food prices, which showed a decline in March, are the items most quickly reflected in retail prices and living costs.

The preliminary report showed the Wholesale Price Index rose to 116.5 in March, meaning that it cost $116.50 on the average to purchase wholesale goods that cost $100 in the 1957-59 period on which the index is based. That was just 10 cents more than in January, and $4.80 more than a year ago. Last week's report on living costs showed the Consumer Price Index up five-tenths of one per cent in February to 132.5, meaning every $10 worth of typical family purchases 10 years ago now costs $13.50.

Living costs last month were 6.3 per cent above a year earlier, while wholesale prices are up 4.3 per cent over the year. Many economists say they view wholesale prices as more indicative of the trend of the nation's price structure.

Strict Drug Laws No Answer To Abuse, Says Johnston

The problem of drug addiction will not be solved by passing stricter laws and imposing stiffer penalties on users, State Rep. Joseph C. Johnston (D-Iowa City) said Monday.

Johnston told the Coralville Sunrise Optimists it was vital that today's drugs be looked into and described realistically.

"We created a credibility gap with young people when we tried to convince them that marijuana was habit-forming and would lead to heroin addiction," he said. "Too many facts contradict this argument, and young people feel that if they were misled about marijuana, then perhaps they've been misled about LSD, speed and other drugs."

"There is a difference (between marijuana and the other drugs) and we must recognize that difference and be entirely truthful in our approach to drug abuse," Johnston said.

Johnston suggested improving education on drugs and establishing walk-in clinics where users could receive treatment anonymously and with no questions asked.

He also urged support for the Senate bill awaiting action in the Iowa House which would allow an addict to receive medical attention at a hospital or physician's office without fear of arrest.

Johnston commended Iowa City Police Judge Marion Neely for his "progressive attitude toward the drug problem."

"He (Neely) has attempted to instill confidence in the drug user that our first concern is to help, rather than punish," Johnston said.

AEC Says Palo Plant Will Be Safe to Public

CEDAR RAPIDS (AP) — The hearing chairman for the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) Wednesday said the proposed $168 million nuclear power plant at Palo would pose no risk to the surrounding population.

The remark of Dr. Samuel Jensch, who was in his second day Wednesday of conducting a public hearing for the AEC's atomic safety and licensing board, followed the announcement that $560 million worth of liability insurance is required by federal law on nuclear power plants.

The power plant is the project of Duane Arnold, board chairman and president of Iowa Electric Power and Light Co., and Donald L. Grant, North Central director for the Rural Electrification Administration (REA).

Iowa Electric is being joined by two REA cooperatives, Cornbelt of Humboldt, and Central Iowa Cooperative of Marion, in 550,000 kilowatt plant.

Under the proposal, Iowa Electric would put up $137.2 million, while each of the cooperatives would be committed to $15.5 million.

Thomas F. Engelhart, counsel for the AEC regulatory staff, said $82 million of the liability insurance coverage must be provided by Iowa Electric, with the balance paid by the federal government.

The issue was raised by George Brown, assistant professor of civil engineering at the University, who appeared at the Linn County Courthouse for the second day.

Brown and Mrs. Francis Higgins of Cedar Rapids also questioned the effects of radiation from the power plant, saying there would also be some hazard to the general public from disposal of nuclear wastes.

In Tuesday's action, Jensch questioned the legality of the REA's part in the joint venture and its compliance with federal regulations in financing the project.

McCuskey Optimistic as Hawks Go to NU for NCAA Mat Finals

By GARY WADE
Big 10 runnerup Iowa appears today in the NCAA wrestling championships at Evanston, Ill., in the first of the three-day tournament with the finals set for Saturday night.

Iowa Coach Dave McCuskey said before leaving, "We'll do real well if we can get a couple of boys to place fairly high, and then just have a few dotted out along the line adding some points to the team score."

McCuskey isn't picking any of his wrestlers for a championship, but said, "I do think we have a whole lineup that could place on top if things just fit into place for them."

"Our strong point is not in individual talent," McCuskey said, "but in the fact that we have a well balanced team

"If they draw eventual champs, of course, our team finish will be low. If we can come up with the average draw, we'll pick up those early points and finish fairly high."

Iowa finished seventh in last year's NCAA championships, paced by team captain Rich Mihal's second-place finish, a third by Verlyn Strallner, and a fourth by Dale Stearns — all three having graduated since then.

Best bets for the Hawks this year rest with 150-pound Don Yahn and 167-pound Phil Henning, who captured Big 10 championships three weeks ago.

Other strong individuals for Iowa include 142-pound Joe Carstensen, conference runner-up, and third-place Big 10 finishers 134-pound Don Briggs, 158-pound Jerry Lee, 118-pound Dan Sherman, and 177-pound Steve DeVries.

Other Hawk entries include 128-pound co-captain Tom Bentz, 190-pound Paul Zander, and heavyweight Mike Edwards, who placed fourth in the Big 10 tournament.

Team favorites in the meet are returning champion Iowa State, which returns two defending champs and walked off with the Big 8 wrestling title last weekend.

Oklahoma State is expected to give Iowa State a battle as they have all year long, beating them twice in dual meets, but losing to them in the big tournaments. The Cyclones and the Cowboys have shared the top two spots in national wrestling polls all season long.

Oklahoma is another perennial wrestling power expected to finish high, and Big 10 champion Michigan State is a dark-horse candidate after having topped the three Big Eight schools in the winter Midlands tournament.

"Iowa State has to have the favorite's tag," McCuskey said, "but Michigan State will do real well and Oklahoma State has been hot all year long about trailing the Cyclones in the national polls after beating them twice."

"You can't really count out a pair of Eastern schools, Navy and Penn State, who have real good team power," McCuskey said, "and in the end, I think that we're going to be right in the thick of things also."

Three national champions will be defending titles in the meet, including ISU's Dan Gable and Jason Smith, and OSU's Jim Grant.

Gable, who has never lost in college or high school wrestling competition, will be wrestling last year, but will be wrestling at 142 this year. Smith will be after his 167-pound title again, and Grant will be seeking a return of his 150-pound crown.

A fourth individual will be seeking his second straight title, heavyweight Jess Lewis, who sat out last season after capturing an NCAA title two years ago.

Hawkeye High Notes

By MIKE SLUTSKY
Sports Editor

SPRING FOOTBALL PRACTICE FOR THE 1970-71 version of the Iowa Hawkeyes begins April 11 — 18 days away or six days after students return from spring break. This, of course, depends upon whether Iowa City is still above sea level. Looking outside now, I'd say the odds are about 50-50 that when April 11 comes rolling around, Swampfox would be a sure bet for a starting position in the Hawks' backfield.

This, needless to say, has to be THE year for Iowa football to come of age. After a winter in which UI football controversy challenged UI basketball excellence for equal time and space in the state's newspapers and TV's and radios, all eyes will be on Coach Ray Nagel and his fifth Hawkeye team. The question is, "How are the Hawks going to fare after the perilous 1969-70 winter?"

The answer to this will, of course, come only in time, although spring practice should serve as some sort of indication as to how the Hawks reacted to all the controversy which plagued the football program during the winter. It is hoped by every Iowa sports fan, as well as by Nagel and his revamped coaching staff, that the players attitudes are something like: "The hell with all the politics; let's go out and play some football."

Putting aside all the "politics" and handing that Nagel will be given a free hand in coaching his team the way he wants, numerous questions still remain for this team.

No. 1 has to be, "What is to become of the blacks who boycotted the first spring practice last year and did not return to the squad later in the fall?" No. 2 is, "What are the Hawks going to do for a quarterback now that Larry Lawrence will be spending his spring training in sunny Miami?" No. 3 is, "Will fullback Tim Sullivan, an All-American candidate before breaking his ankle in a motorcycle accident last spring, be able to regain his old form?" And No. 4 is, "How will the team react emotionally to all that's been said and done over the winter?"

AS FOR NO. 1, NAGEL HAS PURPOSELY dodged the black situation all winter. Sixteen black Iowa football players boycotted opening spring practice last year, and were subsequently dismissed from the team. Seven of the 16 were allowed back on the team before fall training began after explaining their case to the team and then being voted back by the team.

That left nine football players who didn't play football last year — Louis Age, Ken Price, Ray Churchill, Tom Wallace, Herschel Epps, Frank Holmes, Wendell Bell, Mike Phillips and Coleman Lane. What happens to them this year?

Age dropped out of school shortly after the trouble, Wallace said he'd never again CARE to play at Iowa and Phillips was a senior. That gets the list down to six. Although Nagel will not definitely say what his plans are, it appears that he is going to handle each case individually, rather than making it an all-or-none basis.

The first thing Nagel must consider is who wants to come back. Bell, Holmes, Price and Epps — from all indications — have approached Nagel and want to play football. Churchill and Lane, who has been driving a cab for almost two years to stay in school and is taking only a few hours, apparently have not expressed a desire to return to the football team.

Should the four mentioned above be allowed back on the team, spring training would undoubtedly be a probationary period for them, one in which they would have to prove themselves as reliable team members.

Two other blacks who didn't play last year for other reasons will be playing again this year. Tailback Bill Powell's grades continued to flounder, and he no longer is registered in school. Charles "Doc" Bolden, who was off the team last year because of personal reasons, is not counted on being back this season.

Spring Grid Drills Pose Questions For Nagel, Staff

QUARTERBACK: THE HEART OF THE TEAM. What are the Hawks going to do for a quarterback? Lawrence, along with Tom Smith, expected to be Iowa's golden boy this year, decided he'd had enough of Iowa football during the turmoil in December and the two of them headed first west, then southeast — winding up at Miami. What this did was leave Iowa's quarterback cupboard bare.

With the graduation of Mike Ciek and the transferring of Lawrence, the Hawks have no experienced signal-callers on hand. If numbers could make up for experience, though, the Hawks might be in fairly good shape. At least five players will be given a shot at the quarterbacking duties, and three of them are sophomores-to-be.

They are Clarinda's Frank Sunderman, Cedar Rapids' Kyle Skogman and West Des Moines' Jeff Elgin. Sunderman is a big, strong boy who can throw the ball a mile, but is a little slow. Skogman doesn't possess the natural tools of Sunderman, but is a take-charge guy on the field and somehow manages to get the job done. Elgin is the fastest of the three, but was a running back last year for the freshmen and has more experience than the others. He is even or less of an Eddie Podolak-type quarterback.

Not to be forgotten are Roy Bash and Alan Schaefer. Bash is a senior who has been a handeye for the past two seasons, playing tight end most of the time.

Bash was the No. 2 quarterback behind Lawrence when he was a freshman, and came here from Belton, Mo., with great expectations. But with Podolak, Lawrence and Ciek ahead of him, Bash was dropped from quarterback consideration. Now that he is the only one of the four remaining, it may be his opportunity, he needed to distinguish himself. Nagel has said that Bash will definitely get a good chance to prove himself, and Bash is a leader who his teammates respect.

Schaefer was the No. 3 quarterback last year as a sophomore, but saw very little action. A product of Baldwin, Pa., he also came here very highly regarded.

The quarterback may end up depending upon the return of Sullivan. Should the 6-3, 225-pound blockbuster return and perform like he did in his outstanding junior season, the entire backfield can evolve around him. Right now, though, this is not certain.

Sullivan has been working out steadily in the Field House for months, and runs fine in a straight line. But it is his cutting ability which will prove if he is ready to regain his previous status.

Nagel's offense is versatile, and it plays to its strengths. With Sullivan's blocking and running at top strength, a passing quarterback would not be that necessary. Someone with good speed, such as Elgin, would probably fit in quite well. But, once again, this is another "if."

THE LAST QUESTION IS HOW THE TEAM will react to the past trouble-plagued year. A football team, like any other athletic group, has to bind together to be a real team. This is especially true here. For Iowa football to be a success, it has to be a T-E-A-M effort. Coaching football at Iowa, as many have by now learned over the past 10 years, is not the easiest task in the world. It takes a combined effort by everyone connected with the program to produce a winner. Unfortunately, this has been lacking here for some time.

Most of the personnel is there to accomplish this goal. They can be good. For the first time in a long while, Iowa's depth is on a par with other Big 10 schools.

The Hawks have seven returning starters back on offense, and eight returning on defense. The only weaknesses are at quarterback and linebacker, where the Hawks were hit hard by graduation.

So here it is, March 26, almost six months before the actual season begins. But if the Hawks are going to overcome the things that have hurt them in the past, March 26 isn't too soon to start thinking and doing something about them. The Iowa basketball team put it all together this season and became the team everyone thought it could be. Can the Iowa gridders do the same? Only time will tell.

Lanier Signs by Pistons

BUFFALO, N.Y. — In the quiet of his hospital room, All-America Bob Lanier signed a contract Wednesday with the Detroit Pistons of the National Basketball Association claimed to be worth more than $1.5 million for five years of play.

Shortly afterward, the 21-year-old St. Bonaventure center whose leg is in a cast because of recently torn knee ligaments, beamed, "I'm well satisfied. I'm ready to go."

Slotten Wasting No Time In Matching Brother's Feats

throughout our lineup. We should pick up a lot of early points — but it all depends on who our men draw in the early rounds.

When Slotten became eligible as a sophomore, his older brother had already graduated and he set out to prove himself on his own.

Slotten wasted little time in becoming Iowa's leading floor exercise performer and an excellent vaulter. Last year Slotten surprised everyone but himself by finishing runnerup in Big 10 floor exercise.

"You have to be a little cocky to become a top gymnast," said Slotten recently, a junior majoring in physical education. "I always knew I could attain the goals I was after. I can't see anyone going into competition not feeling they can do the best."

Despite a highly successful year in 1968, Slotten was disappointed about not placing in the nationals. This year Slotten will get a second chance in the NCAA in two events since he won the Big 10 floor exercise championship and finished third in the long vault.

Slotten will be accompanied to the nationals at Temple University in Philadelphia next week by four other qualifying Hawkeyes — Phil Farnum, Ken Liorza, Dan Repp and Rich Scorza. But the performers will be competing individually rather than as a team — like it did last year.

Last year the Iowa squad captured the NCAA title and Slotten said being a part of that success was one of his greatest thrills.

Slotten has had plenty of thrills to consider since he began competition at Niles East in Skokie, Ill. Slotten first became interested in gymnastics in eighth grade and was encouraged both by his older brother and his natural ability.

Marc was a high school star at that time and brotherly competition played an important role in the younger Slotten's development.

"We had sort of a game together," said Barry. "Marc would win a title and then say, 'Let's see what you can do.'"

As fate would have it, Barry did not do too badly, and when he left Niles East he carried with him three Illinois high school titles — two in tumbling and one in trampolining.

Slotten was a highly-sought college prospect and weighed full scholarship offers from several Big 10 schools before choosing Iowa.

"I wanted to go to a good gymnastic school," said Slotten, "and Iowa had a winning team. Also Marc was a senior at Iowa and that influenced me too."

This year many of Slotten's best performances have been accomplished while working under painful circumstances. While working out at home over Christmas vacation, Slotten hit his foot on the ground, tearing ligaments and chipping a bone.

"My greatest thrill would be to win the nationals," said Slotten, "but right now I'm at three-fourths strength in tumbling and may have to use cortisone to kill the pain for the NCAA."

The product is ideas.

In fact, our preference is for young college graduates who get a kick out of being self-starters. Air Battles over Suez Canal Down 4 Planes, Israel Claims

TEL AVIV — Dogfights raged over the Suez Canal Wednesday. Israeli pilots claimed four kills and the Egyptians said they shot down one plane. However, both sides denied any plane losses. The planes of the two sides shot it out at 20,000 feet. Israel made no mention of the number involved. A military spokesman in Cairo said 16 planes on each side went into action. The Israeli version of the air duels was this: Israeli jets crossed the canal in the central and southern sectors in the morning, attacking radar installations and artillery positions for a little over an hour with only anti-aircraft guns challenging them. Then Egyptian Russian-made MIGs climbed up to challenge and the dogfights were on. An Israeli military spokesman said four MIGs were shot down and two of the Egyptian pilots were seen to bail out. If so this would be the biggest aerial victory since Israeli pilots claimed 11 Egyptian planes were shot down Sept. 11. In all Israel says it has downed 80 Egyptian planes since the June 1967 war. While the Israelis said all planes returned safely to base, a military spokesman in Cairo said one Israel plane was shot from the skies and another damaged. He insisted all Egyptian planes landed safely. After the air battle, other Israeli jets ranged along the central and southern sectors of the Suez Canal for two hours, pounding Egyptian radar installations, artillery and anti-aircraft batteries and other targets up to 15 miles inside Egypt, a military spokesman said. Shooting broke out in Lebanon again and a Palestinian refugee spokesman said nine guerrillas were killed and several wounded at the hillside village of Kahale, five miles east of Beirut, the capital.

Labor Specialist Says Nation Responds to Youths' Criticism

"The enthusiasm and success of the youth movement has rubbed off on the public employee," a University labor specialist told a conference of public officials Tuesday in the Union. Anthony V. Sinicropi, associate director of the University Center for Labor and Management, said, "The nation as a whole has begun to critically examine many questions" raised by American young people to challenge the established order. "The public employee who now perceives himself as a deprived and underprivileged worker, with some justification, has collectivized and often adopted militant tactics," he said. Sinicropi spoke on "The National Dimension in Public Employee Bargaining" at the opening session of the Conference on Collective Negotiations and Public Administration attended by 50 Iowa school, municipal, county and state employees March 24-26. Another factor cited by Sinicropi as influencing increased collective bargaining by public employees was loss of prestige as prosperity and labor unions in the private sector have improved their members' fringe benefits. Also involved has been decreasing job satisfaction as public employment grows larger and more depersonalized, and President John F. Kennedy's 1962 executive order granting limited collective bargaining rights to federal employees, said Sinicropi. By 1969, 30 states had enacted laws "endorsing in some degree the right of some or all state and local employees to bargain collectively," he said. In addition, the courts have generally held that public employees have the right to organize, he said. "Some courts, such as in Iowa, go further and allow the employees association the right to 'meet and confer' with the employing agency if the latter agency so desires. Without express legislative authority, the courts generally have held that employe groups do not have an inherent right to bargain collectively," he said. Although experiences in the private sector "should not be transplanted in their entirety," Sinicropi said, grievance procedures, mediation, arbitration and fact-finding may be useful in the public sector. "In 1966, about 17 per cent of the labor force worked for some governmental agency, and now the expectations are that nearly 20 per cent will be doing so by 1975," he said. More than 80 per cent of these will be on the local and state levels, he said. "Between 1958 and 1968, the number of government employe strikes per year rose from 15 to 254, and the number of workers involved from 1,700 to 202,000. The man-days of idleness increased from 7,500 to 2.5 million," he said. Sinicropi concluded that legislation governing negotiations with public employes "provides a framework for the orderly structuring of a bargaining relationship. While legislation often creates some confusion after its initial development and enactment, the experience indicates that long-run stability is the goal to be achieved." Program Director Thomas P. Gilroy of the Center told the audience that Iowa "now stands at that tantalizing point between the first stage (Of collective negotiations), marked by opening skirmishes between employes and employes, and the end of the second stage culminating in legislative action. "It remains to be seen how much longer we will remain at this point," he said. In the absence of legislation, the state would have to be guided by "what the courts have said regarding public sector negotiations," said Gilroy.

Abducted Attache Awaiting Release

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — A government spokesman said the U.S. air attaché abducted Tuesday would be freed late Wednesday in advance of the release of about 20 prisoners demanded by his kidnapers. Presidential press secretary Cesar Herrera also said the prisoners would be taken to the Santo Domingo airport and flown directly to a foreign country, possibly Mexico. The American attaché, Lt. Col. Donald J. Crowley, is "safe and sound," Herrera said. The government earlier declined to release all the prisoners demanded by the kidnapers in exchange for Crowley's life. It said it would release only 20 of the 24 demanded. The kidnapers had rejected the government's offer to free only 20 but said they had "postponed the shooting of Col. Crowley." The 47-year-old Crowley was seized by a handful of armed men Tuesday morning as he arrived for polo practice on a field on the western outskirts of the capital. His abductors subsequently identified themselves as members of a group opposed to Balaguer's candidacy for re-election in May's presidential contest. The U.S. Embassy said that it had received an apparently authentic letter from the abducted attaché, who wrote in English: "I am well. I am in the custody of 50 armed men."

Teen Has Part-Time Job: Publishing a Newspaper

Larry Jordan is a normal high school senior from Cedar Rapids, who, like other students, has a part-time job.

The job: he is founder, sole owner, publisher and editor of a bi-weekly newspaper with a circulation of 6,200 and a staff of 11 reporters, editors and photographers.

"We aim our paper at the young adult, say 20 to 40 years old, and try to make the news relevant to them," he said in a recent interview. "We aren't publishing a social register, either; we try to do things we think will be important to our readers."

Like a good businessman, however, he thought about that statement and hastened to add, "The paper is not aimed exclusively at the young people. The older people enjoy it, too. We have quite a good circulation among the local nursing homes, for instance."

In September, 1968, armed with a $50 loan from his mother and the name "The Cedar Rapids Press," Jordan rounded up two prime advertisers — John Zachar Realty Co. and the Cedar Memorial Funeral Home and Cemetery — and started publishing.

"The first issue paid for the second issue by attracting more advertisers, and since then the paper has paid for itself. In fact, it's been a very lucrative business," he said.

The newspaper, still called the Cedar Rapids Press, averages 16 pages per issue and is distributed through 35 news stands at 10 cents per copy.

It is tabloid-sized and follows an ultra-modern typographical style, including the so-called "ragged right" column — the words in the column do not line up evenly on the left as they do in this column, but are spaced naturally, as though written on a typewriter.

Jordan emphasized that the paper was neither a hobby nor a plaything, but a professional production.

He, at 17, is one of the youngest members of a staff which includes a 40-year-old chief photographer and a college girl who is editor of the women's section.

"We are by no means an underground paper," said Jordan. "We don't hesitate to point an accusing finger, even at an advertiser, should we have the occasion; but we take a relatively normal political tone.

We supported (Sen. Harold) Hughes for senator — he's a Democrat — and Tom Riley for representative. He's a Republican and we supported him very strongly," he said.

Like all owner-publisher editors, Jordan is constantly trying to improve the product at the same time he is improving his "capital position" (as he put it).

This led to the purchase of a new headline machine to help with newspaper layout and the remodeling of two rooms in his home for use as offices.

He also said he was proud that the paper can do full color photo reproduction and said that the Press has run 24 full-color pages in the last year.

"We're not really planning to go to weekly publication," he said. "We're striving for quality, not quantity. We're trying to provide a sequel to the news — what it means — as well as including at least one exclusive per issue. We've printed some pretty important stories that the other paper won't touch."

Again, he emphasized professionalism: "We've got a women's section, sports coverage, columns by political personalities and a lot of features and so on and the regular news, of course, and a section oriented to the older readers, like Social Security information."

"We also subscribe to four newspaper syndicates for some information. But the focus is on current affairs. We're even going to include a full color pull-out section on entertainment, called 'Tempo.' And we have two pages of editorial comment."

Jordan said he became interested in newspaper work in 1963, when he received a small printing outfit as a present and began publishing a neighborhood newspaper with a circulation of about 50 copies. Since then, he commented, "The production has grown."

The Publisher

Larry Jordan of Cedar Rapids is a senior in high school and publishes a bi-weekly paper with a circulation of 6,200. He started with a $50 loan from his mother to publish a neighborhood newspaper.

Premier Prepares to Reject Pathet Lao Peace Demand

VIENTIANE, Laos (AP) — PREMIER Prince Souvanna Phouma is preparing a formal rejection of Pathet Lao demands that all U.S. air raids in Laos be halted as an aide said Wednesday.

The aide said the Laotian government will make a counterproposal "in order to keep peace contacts alive."

The bombing halt demand was part of a five-point program from Prince Souphanouvong, the nominal leader of the Pathet Lao. It was delivered to the premier Sunday.

The aide reiterated the position that Souvanna has taken ever since an outline of the Pathet Lao proposal was made public last month — "if the North Vietnamese withdraw from Laos there won't be any necessity for the bombings."

Souphanouvong's letter did not "bring a new element" but there are "some common points," the aide added.

One of the points he thought could serve as a basis for talks is that all countries respect the neutrality and territorial integrity of Laos as provided by the 1962 agreements in Geneva setting up this Asian kingdom as a neutral state.

Other points in Souphanouvong's letter include a ceasefire and a political consultative conference to set up a coalition government.

On the battlefields, government troops beat off before dawn an attack by several hundred North Vietnamese on a ridgeline position five miles north of the Long Cheng army base, informed sources said.

The attack was repulsed with the help of AC47 gunships. Informants reported six North Vietnamese bodies were found after the two-hour engagement. Government casualties were described as light.

One source said the North Vietnamese were making nightly probes against the ridge while building up supplies, possibly for a big attack on Long Cheng, headquarters of Gen. Vang Pao's army of Meo tribesmen, 80 miles north of Vientiane.

The Drug Scene

By KAREN GOOD

EDITOR'S NOTE — The following information on LSD was taken from articles in the monthly American Medical Association (AMA) publication and from medical and pharmacy students' discussions of the drug. Each Monday night the group of 40 students discusses a different drug and invites persons in the Iowa City area who have used that drug to describe their experiences with the drug.

Students in the class are available to speak to any group which wishes them to come, according to Jim Holzapfel, P4, Iowa City, chairman of the group's drug education committee.

LSD is a hallucinogenic drug first synthesized in 1938 by two medical researchers — Hoffman and Stool.

However, its hallucinogenic effect was not discovered until 1943 when Hoffman — in testing the drug — took a small dose for experimental purposes.

During the last eight years the drug has become controversial because of its use by people — primarily of college and high school age — who buy it illicitly and take it either orally or intravenously without medical supervision.

A normal "trip" on LSD can be divided into four phases.

•The initial stage of the "trip" occurs immediately after the drug is administered and may last from one minute to three hours. This part of the trip is usually the most unpleasant because LSD bought on the illicit market usually contains various other amphetamines or barbiturates. These speed up the body's circulation system, resulting in muscle aches and cramps, headaches, shortness of breath and pupil dilation for the user.

•The second stage of the trip — the peak stage — is when most of the hallucinatory effects are experienced and it lasts from one to four hours. During this period, the user usually experiences visual hallucinations such as leaning buildings, caved-in rooms and lace work patterns.

Later in the peak stage the user frequently experiences visual blurring — distinct visual preceptions are limited to the center of a scene, with blurred images at the periphery. During this period, the user may also experience effects such as "after images" — perception which is similar to delayed action photography — and "out of body experiences" when the user's mind seems to leave his body and travel about the area where he is on his "trip."

•The third stage is the "slight experience of normality stage." It usually lasts nine hours, but may not be experienced at all or may be experienced for several days.

During this stage, the user will usually experience "flash backs" to the peak stage, or by means of smoking a cigarette or drinking an alcoholic beverage, may return again to the peak stage.

It is also during this third stage that some users experience problems in returning to reality.

•The fourth and last stage of the "trip" is the "return to reality" which may take from 24 to 48 hours. During this period, the user is usually experiencing mild tension, fatigue and a general state of relaxation.

Medical reports agree that LSD is not addicting. However users can build up a short term tolerance.

For example, over a three day period of its use, a user may need an increasing dosage to remain "turned on." However, a week later the tolerance level will have subsided, thus allowing the user to begin again with a small dosage.

There is also substantial evidence from a number of case studies done in medical centers across the country since 1967 that LSD taken during the first month of pregnancy will result in abnormal births — primarily in damage to the unborn baby's nervous system.

Medical evidence also indicates that LSD users may experience panic, paranoia or accidental death.

However, of 5,000 persons to whom the drug was administered under medical supervision — primarily patients in U.S. psychopathic hospitals — five attempted suicide and one committed suicide after the drug was administered.

Some medical research also shows that LSD exposure may cure alcoholic and homosexual tendencies.

However, according to the studies, there is no "safe" method to determine whether a person will react favorably or unfavorably to the drug.

Legally, a person who sells or produces LSD may be fined up to $10,000 or sentenced up to five years' imprisonment or both. A person over 21 years of age, who sells LSD to a person under 18 years of age may be fined up to $15,000 or sentenced to up to 10 years imprisonment or both.

Charges for possession of LSD for personal use is a felony which may result in a fine of up to a $1,000 or up to one year imprisonment or both.

Candidates Comment

Editor's Note — The race for the First District Congressional seat is underway and The Daily Iowan will run Candidates Comment in which the editors will excerpt candidates' statements and opinions from their press releases and speeches.

SCHWENDEL
Ken Wagner of rural West Liberty and Keith Hemingway of rural Iowa City announced Tuesday the formation of the rural Johnson County Schwengel for Congress Committee. The Iowa City committee was announced earlier.

Stanley

Dave Stanley, candidate for the Republican nomination, called Wednesday for "strong enforcement of the Landrum-Griffin Act to prevent a repetition of the United Mine Workers corrupt election and the Yablonski murder."

Speaking in Davenport, Stanley said, "The federal government is using the Landrum-Griffin Act to throw out this dishonest election. Congressman Schwengel voted against the Landrum-Griffin Act which is known as the working man's bill of rights. If Schwengel's side had won, these union members would not have this protection against fraud."

Nixon Defusing China Issue

(c) Dispatch News Service
By JAMES C. THOMPSON

Any history of the late 1940s and '50s would give Richard Nixon credit for helping inflame the issue of China policy in American politics.

Yet, a history of the 1970s may give credit to Nixon for extinguishing those flames at very long last. Such a judgment is suggested by his first year in office.

"It is certainly in our interest... that we take what steps we can toward improved practical relations with Peking," So says the President in his State of the World message.

"We believe that any improvement in our relations with Communist China is in our long-term national interest." So reads a State Department internal newsletter for January, 1970, the month in which Sino-American talks at Warsaw resumed after a two-year hiatus.

"You wouldn't believe the change in atmosphere here." So speaks a veteran China specialist in the same department.

In such words and other action lies one major sleeper of Nixon's first year. It is not simply that an administration has made new overtures to Peking (Johnson and Humphrey tried with conciliatory rhetoric). It is that a Republican Administration has made overtures to Peking — and with no audible protest from Congress, the press or the public.

What this means is that regardless of China's response American politics are turning a decisive corner: after twenty years, the explosive China issue is finally being defused; the wounds of China debate are finally beginning to heal.

It is ironic that the defuser is the man and the party which organized the national hunt of the fifties for those who "lost China."

Republican anti-Communists are the least politically vulnerable to charges of "softness" on Communists and therefore are the best equipped to risk accommodation abroad. Those who recall the old Nixon will surely be vexed and disbelieving. But those who care more about the issue — the problem of China — should forget, if not forgive, Nixon has started moving.

Few would have predicted such progress a year ago. In the third question of the new President's first press conference, he slammed the door on reconsidering Peking's exclusion from the United Nations. At the same time, the administration and the Dutch jointly bungled their handling of a Chinese defector in the Netherlands, thereby giving a handy pretext for cancelling the scheduled Warsaw talk of February, 1969.

It looked then as if Nixon would go the way of his predecessors and glumly wait for China to change its "attitude" — the traditional cover for immobility.

But then came some small rays of light. In April, Secretary of State William Rogers announced a policy of evenhandedness in the Sino-Soviet conflict. In July, the department further eased its restrictions on the travel of Americans to the mainland and allowed the small crack in the trade embargo since the Korean War by permitting tourists to bring home $100 worth of mainland products.

At the end of the year, the first big step occurred: a partial lifting of the embargo to allow for indirect trade. The administration amended the Foreign Assets Control regulations to permit overseas subsidiaries of American firms to trade with China in non-strategic goods, to eliminate restrictions on American participation in third-country trade involving goods of mainland origin and to remove completely the July $100 ceiling on non-commercial imports.

(It was only one of many ironies that the new regulations were announced with enthusiasm by Sen. Hugh Scott, R-Penn.), a long-time friend of the Chinese Nationalist Government — but also a discerning collector of Chinese art.)

Rhetoric, too, was changing. The administration departed from former State Department Secretary Dean Rusk's practice of referring to Peking by its Nationalist Chinese name of Peiping. And department spokesmen began to call the mainland the "People's Republic of China."

There is also stirring on the other side. Chinese officials here and there engaged in small talk with American diplomats at receptions and sometimes even sought to be photographed with them. Unofficial Americans — students, scholars, assorted would-be peace-makers — visited Chinese missions abroad and thought they sensed receptivity to possible private contacts.

Finally, and most important, private encounters between American and Chinese officials in Warsaw resulted in a resumption of the broken ambassadorial talks.

And this time the scenario was significantly changed. For their 135th session in January, the negotiators abandoned the usual Polish palace — bristling, one must assume, with electronic eavesdroppers — and retreated to the security of the Chinese Embassy. For the most recent session, on Feb. 20, with China we have had minimal relations and no leverage, thanks to our twenty-year policy of "containment and isolation."

So communication and eventually negotiation with Peking is now in the U.S. national interest if we want peace in Asia after Vietnam.

The Chinese negotiations are also important to U.S.-Russian relations. Moscow is afforded a great luxury if it is allowed to think it can take us for granted. So overtures toward China are not only sound in terms of long-term regional stability; they are also useful in terms of short-term bargaining tactics with the U.S.S.R.

As for the Chinese, no one can predict the evolution of their foreign policy because of the Cultural Revolution and the eventual death of Mao Tse-tung. But it is self-evident that at least some in Peking are awakening these days to the dangers and promise of a multi-polar world.

the other major powers. And China's immediate interests are served by making the Russians nervous.

But will Nixon keep moving, and will the Chinese respond?

One thing is certain: progress toward any Washington-Peking detente will be slow. The cultural and ideological chasm is too wide, the accumulation of grievances too bitter, and the outstanding territorial issue of Taiwan (Formosa) too complex to permit the sudden shift which Moscow fears.

If Nixon's negotiators in Warsaw can proceed with their present silent detente and if Nixon's policy-makers in Washington can build on their sound unilateral beginnings, progress is possible on trade, on travel, and perhaps even on cultural exchanges in the months ahead.

The next logical step for Washington would be further modification of the Korean War embargo, which would place our trade with China on the same basis as our trade with the Soviet Union. Another step would be the complete rescinding of the selective travel ban (still in force primarily because of the special political issue posed by travel to Cuba).

Both steps are likely if Washington's China specialists — newly liberated from the constricting atmosphere created by Rusk — have their way. Neither requires a Chinese response, though both would offer attractive alternative options to China's decision makers.

Equally likely, though more difficult to achieve, might be a Warsaw formula for quietly bypassing the issue of Taiwan. Peking would take note of the progressive de-Americanization of Taiwan: The Seventh Fleet Taiwan Straits patrol has already been cut back to near zero; harassments of the mainland have been so reduced that two months have passed without a single "serious warning" from Peking about incidents; and Vietnam-related use of Taiwan may soon be phased out.

If Washington added that despite our continued and firm commitment to the defense of Taiwan against forcible seizure, we view Taiwan's long-term political future as a matter to be decided by Chinese and Taiwanese, not Americans — Peking might just see its way to edging Taiwan out of the limelight.

Less likely, it appears, will be any significant shift by the Nixon administration on the issue of United Nations membership as long as Peking insists on the expulsion of Taipei.

Some day, perhaps, a President and his secretary of state will have the courage to press for universal membership of all divided countries and an expansion of the Security Council. In the meantime, however, three significant capitals seem to have little desire to see Peking's delegates come to Manhattan: Washington, Moscow, — and, so far, Peking itself.

Will Nixon eventually "recognize" Communist China? In a formal sense, probably not, though the Warsaw talks have implied de facto recognition since they began under Eisenhower in 1955. But during his time in office, Nixon can still go far towards putting our relations with China on the same basis as our relations with the Soviet Union during those years from 1917 to 1933.

Neely Plans Drug Studies In Iowa City

Studies of four areas of drug abuse is being planned locally, according to Iowa City Police Court Judge Marion Neely.

In an organizational meeting Tuesday called by Neely, local citizens discussed Iowa City illicit drug traffic and what could be done to curtail drug abuse.

The loose-knit group decided Tuesday to study four areas: use among high school students, University students, local adults and the local migrant community, according to Neely.

Neely defined the local migrant community as persons of approximately University age, but not affiliated with the University — persons who come to Iowa City and remain for varying lengths of times without becoming permanent residents.

Student councils from local high schools and junior high schools will be asked to assist with the study among student of that age.

University students will be sought to study the problem within the University, Neely said.

the site was the American Embassy.

Henceforth the negotiations will alternate between the two embassies. Meanwhile — again significantly — both sides are adhering to a policy of absolute secrecy about the talks.

How to explain these developments? And what do they portend?

At the heart of the matter is the Soviet Union. In the past twelve months, the long-simmering and fundamentally unresolvable Sino-Soviet conflict has burst into spasms of open warfare on the 5000-mile border between the two nations.

One result has been a nationwide Chinese campaign for "war preparedness" and rumored threats from Moscow of a pre-emptive nuclear strike. The other result has been a significant change in American perceptions and, it seems, in Chinese perceptions as well.

For many years Washington viewed East Asia as a bi-polar region: one in which the United States, in alliance with Japan, confronted a Sino-Soviet monolith. But the reality and probable permanence of Sino-Soviet tensions and the spectacular rise of Japan have revealed a new reality for the 1970s — a multi-polar balance involving the separate interests of the U.S.S.R., China, Japan and the United States.

To deal with such a balance by averting a wider war and by achieving some stability in the region, it is necessary that America have relations, and thereby some leverage, with each of the other powers. But

A Soviet-American alliance against China, with Japan also on our side, would terrify the Chinese. Thus China's long-term interests, as well as ours, will be served by more friendly relations with

Candidates Disagree on Volunteer Army, Voting Age

William Albrecht and William "Blackie" Strout say they question the value of a volunteer army while Edward Mezvinsky says he favors it; Mezvinsky and Albrecht say they favor 18-year-old voting but Strout says he would go with a 19-year-old voter bill.

These two issues provoked the major differences of opinion among the three candidates for the Democratic nomination for First District Congressman at a question and answer session in Phillips Hall Auditorium Tuesday night.

The meeting began with a 10-minute speech by each candidate about his campaign and platform.

In the question and answer period that followed, all candidates basically agreed on issues except the volunteer army and 18-year-olds voting.

Of the volunteer army, Strout, Scott County sheriff, said, "We have to look at the costs. One of the dangers of the future may be a taxpayers' revolt if taxes keep rising, but if it can be shown that a volunteer army will work without overtaxing people, I would favor it."

Albrecht, University professor of economics, cited three considerations. "First, the draft may violate Constitutional rights," he said. "Second, will a volunteer army keep us out of wars? I think this can be argued both ways. But if we have a volunteer army, who in this room will join?" he asked. "No one volunteered. All right, you know it will be the people with very little economic opportunity elsewhere. For that reason, I'm not ready to favor a volunteer army," he said.

On the question of 18-year-old voting, Strout said, "I think a person should be able to graduate from high school and pay taxes a year before he can tell us what to do with tax money. As for the old argument that if you're old enough to fight you should be able to vote, I say fine, let 18-year-olds who are in the service have a chance to vote."

Albrecht said in his speech that it would serve United States' interests best if all troops were to be withdrawn from Vietnam in one year, but it's obvious that this is not happening.

Albrecht said, "I can see it now. Nixon will preempt a few minutes of prime T.V. time and announce a withdrawal of 30,000 troops from Vietnam but of course we'll have to send 20,000 back to Laos and probably the others to Cambodia."

Discussing Nixon's public relations campaign, Albrecht said, "If someone disagrees with the President, then he's no longer in the majority and can be ignored. I think, however, in the next election, the President will be shown that he's been ignoring too many people."

"Our major consideration in the First District will be survival. If I continue to pollute at the present rate and if we continue this insane arms race, there will be no First District to talk about," he said.

Mezvinsky, state representative from west Johnson County, followed by saying "I've had the unfortunate position of being in the legislature — wearing that hat — and running for Congress at the same time. When I ran out of the legislature today I made a speech and called it one of the most archaic institutions this state has ever had, so I think some of the people there were glad to see me go."

Mezvinsky said, "I operate by exposing what goes on. And when we have something like Vietnam going on, we have to attack the President for the half-truths he has perpetrated there and throughout Southeast Asia." Mezvinsky also favored a set timetable for withdrawal of troops.

Mezvinsky then criticized the Nixon administration's stands on defense spending, civil rights and the nominations to the Supreme Court. He said, "Look at the firing of Leon Panetta from HEW. Look at those Supreme Court nominations, and especially this last one. To me, a position like this requires greatness — not mediocrity. When you have a man whose decisions have been reversed over 50 per cent of the time by higher courts — that's over three times the national average — this name shouldn't appear for any appointment."

Strout said he was glad Nixon is finally beginning to show some interest in the plight of the middle and lower income Americans.

The sheriff also had several comments about law and order, stating, "Drugs and mob violence are no longer social problems. In the same paper that carried the 'Nixon Fears Recession' story there was a headline, 'Heroin Epidemic in Iowa City'. If the figures in that story are correct, Iowa City is in for trouble."

In the question and answer period that followed, all three candidates basically agreed that seniority should be abolished in Congress, Red China should be admitted to the U.N., the U.S. should tone down its part in the Mideast crisis, collective bargaining should be allowed federal employees, and both sides were to be in the "Chicago 7" trial.
