Jordan Crisis Escalates

By The Associated Press

Direct fighting raged in Amman on Friday and continued into yesterday. In a further attempt to ease the tense situation, U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger arrived in Jordan on Thursday to meet with King Hussein and other officials. The U.S. delegation, which also included Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger, arrived in Jordan on Wednesday, and the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Defense met with King Hussein and other officials on Thursday morning.

Kissinger and Schlesinger met with King Hussein on Thursday morning to discuss the situation in Jordan and the Middle East. They also met with Prime Minister Yasser Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) to discuss the situation in the Gaza Strip and the West Bank.

The meeting was part of a U.S. effort to encourage a peaceful resolution to the conflict in the region. The U.S. government has been working to mediate between Jordan and the PLO in an effort to halt the fighting and bring about a ceasefire.

Kissinger and Schlesinger were scheduled to return to the United States on Thursday afternoon. They had been in Jordan for three days, during which time they met with a wide range of Jordanian officials, including King Hussein.

The fighting in Jordan has been one of the most intense in recent weeks, and it has raised concerns about the stability of the region. The conflict has also drawn international attention, with the United States and other countries calling for a peaceful resolution.

The situation in Jordan is particularly sensitive, as the country is a key player in the region and has deep ties to both Israel and Syria.

The fighting in Jordan is just one of many ongoing conflicts in the Middle East. The region is marked by tense relations between Israel and the Palestinians, as well as between Jordan and Syria. The United States is involved in efforts to mediate between Israel and the Palestinians, and it has also been working to bring about a ceasefire in the broader conflict in the region.

Nixon Asks FBI Power For Campus Intervention

By BILL BLAIR

The Iowa City News-Herald

Nixon has warned campuses that he will use force if necessary to resolve conflicts.

The president's trip to Des Moines was also a sharp rebuke to the FBI's use of violence on college campuses.

The FBI has been under fire for its use of force on college campuses in recent weeks.

On Friday, the FBI used tear gas and batons to end a protest at the University of Iowa. The protest was organized by the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) and was in support of the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO).

The FBI's action was widely criticized, and it has raised questions about the use of force by the FBI on college campuses.

Nixon has said that he will not allow the FBI to use force on college campuses. He has also criticized the FBI's use of force on other occasions.

A word to the image-makers

There is no doubt that the citizens of Iowa, and to a certain extent the rest of the United States, are frightened and angry about student unrest.

There is no doubt that those who feel anger are much too ready to become the victims of the worst fantasies and distortions, and will continue to see them as just as evil as they do.

But the question to be asked is whether we are going to go on as we have been doing, or whether we are going to sit down and talk, and whether we are going to try to see things from the other person's point of view.

Despite the fact that we may be angry, we must not lose sight of the fact that we are human beings, and that we are capable of understanding and of being understood.

The only way to solve this problem is to have a peaceful and honest dialogue between the government and the students.

Down the rabbit's hole

Introduction

The world is a complex and unpredictable place. It is full of risks and uncertainties, and we are often faced with difficult choices. As a result, it is important to be prepared for any eventuality.

Game Theory vs. Real World

Game theory is an attempt to understand the complexity and unpredictability of human behavior in strategic situations. It is used to model the interactions between individuals, and to predict the outcomes of those interactions.

However, real-world situations are often more complex than those modeled by game theory. They may involve multiple players, multiple objectives, and multiple strategies.

Therefore, it is important to be prepared for the possibility that real-world situations may not be as predictable as those modeled by game theory.

The future of society depends on our ability to make decisions in the face of uncertainty. We must be prepared to deal with the unpredictable and to think creatively about the possibilities that may arise.

Agnew Attacks Sen. Gore

Memphis, Tenn., 20—Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, welcomed to Tennessee by Sen. Albert Gore, charged Tuesday in the emphatic Democratic area he is a force in campaign target, to is the "businessman regional candidate of the Eastern Liberal establishment."

In his first campaign visit in a state in which Republicans are expected to pick up a Senate seat, Agnew pledged strong support for Gov. William B. Waller of Mississippi, who is an opponent of the legislation targeted by the Administration.

Agnew called the legislation "草案" by the "businessman liberal" congressmen, who he said were "trying to steal the show from the voters."

Agnew accused the Vice President, who is a candidate for the presidency, of being a "businessman liberal" who is "trying to steal the show from the voters."

JIMMY CARTER OF GEORGIA—American Indian gay rights activist's words have been a thorn in the side of the Democratic Party. The party has been forced to address its long history of discrimination against gay Americans, and its platform now includes support for gay rights.

However, some members of the party remain skeptical of the role that gay rights should play in the political discourse. This has led to tension within the party, as different factions struggle for control.

In addition to the civil rights issues, the party is also facing challenges in the realm of foreign policy. The party's stance on the Middle East conflict has been particularly contentious, with some members calling for diplomatic engagement and others advocating for military action.

The Democratic Party is also facing a challenge from the Republican Party, which is increasingly popular among voters. The Republican Party has been able to capitalize on the economic downturn and the issues related to it, such as healthcare and taxes.

Despite these challenges, the Democratic Party remains committed to its core values of social justice and equality. The party is working to address the issues that are important to its base, while also appealing to a broader electorate.

In the coming years, the Democratic Party will continue to face challenges, but it is well-equipped to handle them. With a strong base of support and a clear vision for the future, the party is poised to lead the country forward.
Coeducational Fraternity

Coeducational fraternities are in vogue, now being adopted by the University of Iowa and other schools. The University of Iowa adopted the system last year, and the first pledges were initiated.

The system has been tried out by a number of schools, and the results have been satisfactory. The system is said to be more successful than the single-sex system, and it is also said to be more economical.

Fulton Pledges Fight For State Drug Control

State Commissioner of Agriculture Donald J. Krall, Democrat, has decided to run for the department's executive post in the upcoming state election. The announcement was made during an interview with the Tribune's City Editor Mr. Headley.

Krall, who has served as the department's chief executive for the past four years, said he had decided to run for the position to continue the work he has been doing. He said he believed the current administration was not doing enough to address the state's drug problem.

"I have been working with the legislature and other agencies to develop a comprehensive drug control program," Krall said. "But I believe we need to do more, and I am the only candidate who has the experience and expertise to do it."
