Reaction Sharp to Nixon Indochina Stance

Nixon: 'Hard Choices' Lie Ahead in Vietnam

WASHINGTON, D.C. - President Nixon warned Thursday that the end of the Vietnam war is my "biggest concern." He also said he would send additional American forces to Vietnam, a move that could bring the war closer to the American homefront.

Pressured by rising public unrest and escalating Viet Cong attacks, Nixon announced addition of 25,000 troops, bringing total American forces in Vietnam to nearly half a million. He said the move would be in place by March.

"The war is not over," Nixon declared. "It's a long haul and we don't have it wrapped up."

But the defense secretary, Melvin R. Laird, said: "President Nixon has made a tentative decision to send 25,000 additional troops to Vietnam."

The administration has been considering sending more than 40,000 more Americans to Vietnam.

The announcement of the new troop build-up follows a series of factional disputes and power struggles among top administration officials.

The new move has been welcomed by many proponents of increased American military efforts in Indochina. But there were strong indications that the move was made in the face of growing criticism of the war, particularly among the public.

"They never plan to win this war," said a Washington political commentator. "It's a losing proposition."

North Viet Tanks Hit Laos Invaders

SAINIO — Three regime airplanes, apparently against the express wishes of President Thieu's government, were shot down Thursday night near Ninh Binh, 30 miles inland from the coastal town of Lang Son, leaving the military establishment in a state of shock.

While there were no reports of further regime advances during the night, the fighting was continued in the area.

The fighting in Lang Son, 90 miles north of Haiphong, was an isolated incident. It did not seem related to the battle in the Haiphong area.

Dr. Williams E. Abraham, who was a member of the delegation to the United States, said that he had been told by a regime official that the attack was a spoiling tactic by the North Vietnamese to prevent the regime from releasing prisoners to the United States.

Down the Tubes

A brisk, charged introduction, a sketch of circular organic agents, and Jack LaLanne, the author of popular fitness columns, all combine to make the evening a bright one. The scenes transition smoothly from one to the other, and the audience is engaged throughout.

Hair, Hair, Everywhere

There is a great deal of talent among the performers in this production. The cast is well-rehearsed and the costumes are well-designed. The set design is also impressive, creating a sense of depth and movement on stage.
