Jury Deliberations Begin in Trial Of Panthers

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A jury of five blacks and seven whites began deliberations Wednesday in the murder-kidnap trial of Black Panther chairperson Bobby G. Seale and Ericka Huggins, a local party leader. The judge cautioned the jurors to consider the motives of some prosecution witnesses.

Seale and Huggins have been on trial in Superior Court since Nov. 17 in connection with the slaying of Alex Rackley, another Panther, on May 21, 1969.

Outside the courthouse, a small group organized by party leaders assembled for the start of a vigil, which they said will last until there is a verdict in the case.

Judge Harold M. Mulvey finished his three-hour charge to the panel with advice that it was their duty "to take the evidence and testimony and decide for yourselves what you think the facts of the case are."

The political, religious and other beliefs of the defendants are not "justifications" for criminal acts, the 56-year-old judge declared, and neither are assertions that Seale and Huggins intended to work in the "better interest of black people" or the Black Panther party.

Mulvey also told the jurors to consider the motives of prosecution witnesses who were involved in the torture and slaying of Rackley and "may be looking for favors" in the disposition of their cases.

Such witnesses, four of whom testified, "may be in a somewhat different position from other witnesses," the judge said.

Seale, 34, and Huggins, 23, face capital charges of kidnaping resulting in death and aiding and abetting murder, in addition to conspiracy to kidnap and to murder. Huggins also is charged with binding and criminal intent.

The prosecution claims Seale ordered Rackley slain during a 12-hour visit to New Haven two years ago Wednesday and that the alleged orders were carried out by three other Black Panthers two days later.

Only one prosecution witness, George Sams Jr., testified that he heard such an order. The defense attacked Sams' credibility, claiming he once was expelled from the Panthers by Seale for stabbing another party member in the leg.

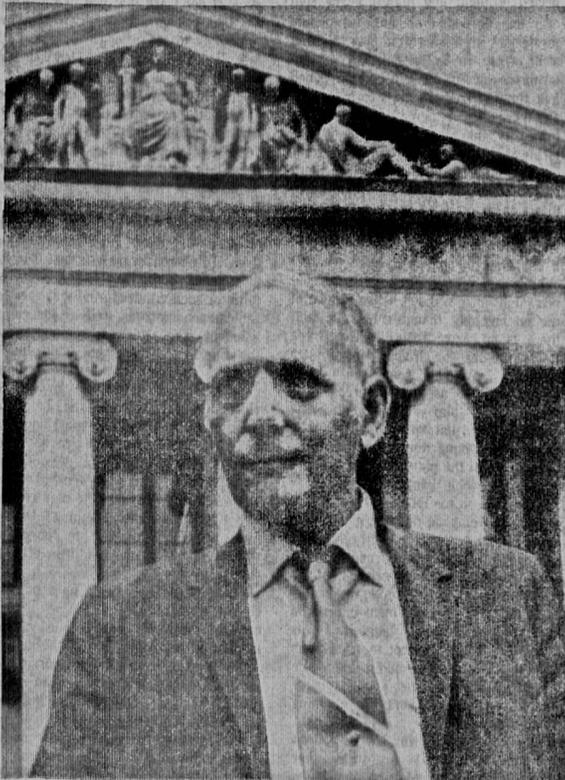

Sams has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the case and admitted giving orders for Rackley's death at the scene of the crime. One witness testified that Sams told her he "hated and resented" Seale because of the expulsion and "vowed to get even one day." The defense blames him for the killing.

Sheriff Acquitted In Alabama Beating

OPELIKA, Ala. (AP) — An all white jury acquitted black Sheriff Lucius Amerson and his black chief deputy of beating a black prisoner after a jailhouse fight.

After 65 minutes of deliberations Wednesday, the jury returned separate verdicts finding Amerson, 37, and Chief Deputy Richard Coleman Jr., 27, innocent of violating the civil rights of the prisoner, Wilbert Dean Harris.

The two officers were indicted by a federal grand jury after Harris complained that he was beaten and kicked after he surrendered following the shooting in the Macon County jail in nearby Tuskegee last Aug. 22. Harris had been brought to the jail after being arrested on drunk driving charges.

District Court Won't Rule On Sex Education Suit

By LORRIE PIACENZA
Daily Iowan Reporter

"I'm pleased of course," was the reaction of Superintendent James Reusswig to the news that the suit against the Iowa City School District's junior high school sex education program was dismissed by District Court Judge William R. Eads Wednesday.

Reusswig was named a defendant in the suit, as were Michael Roe, a teacher in the program, Edwin K. Baker, principal of West Junior High School, Kirk Hansen, principal of South East Junior High School, Paul Johnston, state superintendent of public instruction and the seven members of the school board.

Eads dismissed the case after citing the Iowa Rules of Civil Procedure which state that the court may refuse judgment when a decision would not resolve the issue at hand.

Eads suggested that the plaintiffs — about 100 local citizens — take the case to a three judge federal panel, the Iowa attorney general, the county attorney, a Grand Jury, the state legislature, or the ballot box.

The suit charged the defendants and the program with violation of the first and 14th amendments of the Constitution. Eads said that such a question is a matter for a federal panel.

The suit also charged the defendants with the dissemination of obscene material to youths in schools, a felony in Iowa. This factor would allow the plaintiffs to take the matter to a Grand Jury for an indictment or ask the county attorney to file a criminal charge.

The state superintendent was also charged with the misuse of public funds for making obscene material available for teachers. Among these allegedly obscene materials was a list of questions about sex asked by students at South East and West Junior High Schools.

"They (the defendants) seem to be getting their way all right in every field," commented Echilisk Chamberlain, one of the plaintiffs.

She feels the opposition has not been given a chance in this issue, and cited the committee set up to review the program as an example. She claims that only four people opposing aspects of the sex education program are on it.

Reusswig, however, said that the committee is made up of 25 students and parents. Other interested persons are free to call in whenever they wish, he added.

Chamberlain said she knows of no further action the plaintiffs plan to take, but she plans to discuss further plans with the plaintiff's attorney, D.C. Nolan, as soon as possible.

More Verdicts in Disturbance Trials

One person was found guilty, one acquitted and 13 had cases dismissed Wednesday as more people arrested in recent disturbances came to trial here.

Jerry Full, A1, was ordered to pay a $100 fine after being convicted of disorderly conduct in a demonstration May 5. Full will appeal the decision.

Roger Bishop, A4, was acquitted on a similar charge filed May 10. Police Court Judge Joseph Thornton

Policy Group: No Advice On Grade System Change

By JUDY SCHULTZ
Daily Iowan Reporter

The Educational Policies Committee of the College of Liberal Arts Wednesday afternoon told the Liberal Arts faculty that although it had spent all year studying the college's grading system, it has no recommendations to make on changing the system.

Sam Becker, chairperson of the Department of Speech and Dramatic Arts and a member of the committee, told the faculty that the committee had discussed four alternative methods of grading: the use of comprehensive examinations; a totally pass-fail system; written assessments from instructors; and a 400-point system.

He noted that 1,779 out of 2,310 students responding to a recent poll indicated they want some change in the grading system, but no more than 20 per cent of them voted for any one system.

SEPARATE SYSTEMS

Faculty members discussed the possibility of grading creative courses differently from such as the sciences where finer distinctions can be made among students' performances.

"Such a high proportion of high grades are given in these creative courses anyway that the grades aren't meaningful," complained one faculty member.

He suggested extending the pass-fail system to these creative courses, since employers usually ask for samples of a student's work.

Other faculty members objected that a student's grade point then would not depend on the courses he or she is most skilled in.

Becker questioned whether the committee should put pressure on the faculty to conform to a regular grade distribution, with equal numbers of A's and F's. Other professors objected that this would cheat students in small classes where all do excellent work.

STUDENT REFERENDUM

A pass-fail system of grading was approved by University of Iowa students in a referendum last March.

The results of that referendum, which gave students a choice between retaining the present system, instituting a pass-fail-honors system, a satisfactory-unsatisfactory system or a pass-fail system, are presently under study by a Student Senate subcommittee.

In other business, the faculty voted to conduct systematic and regular reviews of the departments in the college, utilizing personnel from other departments and from sources outside the university.

The faculty defeated a motion to extend the date for dropping courses to the twelfth week of the semester. The drop date is now the tenth week.

A motion giving the Executive Committee of the college the duty to advise the dean on professional grievances of faculty members was also passed by the faculty.

Hugh E. Kelso, associate dean of the college, reported that 240 students are enrolled as candidates for the new degree of Bachelor of General Studies.

Dean Dewey B. Stult told the faculty that he expected "the teaching function to receive more emphasis, at the expense of reduced emphasis on research."

He urged the study of quality teaching in the college, calling improvement in teaching "top priority."

Stult also again warned against "politicization" of the university, that, he claims, might cause the university to lose its "objectivity."

"The university should not become a social agent charged with the correction of society's ills, an arm of the government or of industry, or a haven for those who are promoting a cause," said Stult.

Senate Kills SST Again

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Wednesday rejected any revival of federal subsidies for an American supersonic transport in a vote underscoring a concession of defeat earlier in the day by the White House.

The defeat was the third in a row for the project intended to put the United States in competition with the Soviet Union, Britain and France to fly a fleet of faster-than-sound commercial passenger jets.

House Republican Leader Jerry Ford, given much credit for the House's turn-about decision last week restoring SST funds, said he has little doubt the House will accept the Senate decision, thus killing the program.

The Senate vote thus many end a decade-long battle over the project hailed by supporters as vital to continued American aviation-market dominance and condemned by critics as a grossly wasteful economic and environmental disaster.

Koster Demoted, Stripped of Medal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maj. Gen. Samuel W. Koster, a former West Point superintendent, was demoted, censured and stripped of a high decoration Wednesday for not conducting a more searching investigation of the My Lai massacre.

Secretary of the Army Stanley R. Resor ordered Koster, once considered a rising star in the Army's officer corps, reduced one grade in rank to brigadier general and his Distinguished Service Medal revoked for his performance as American Division commander at the time of the My Lai incident in March 1968.

Resor also directed that Brig. Gen. George H. Young Jr., who was assistant division commander, be censured and his DCM withdrawn. However, the secretary rejected a recommendation of Army Chief of Staff Gen. William C. Westmoreland that Young demoted to Colonel.

Canadians, Soviets Sign Pact

MOSCOW (AP) — Canada and the Soviet Union signed an agreement Wednesday calling for regular consultations at the foreign ministers' level to discuss international problems and bilateral dealings.

In addition, the protocol signed by Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau and Premier Alexei N. Kosygin provided the promise of urgent contacts between the two nations whenever the maintenance of peace is endangered.

Trudeau and Kosygin signed the protocol at a brief ceremony at the government reception house in Lenin Hills.

Turkish Kidnapers Still Hold Israeli

ISTANBUL, Turkey (AP) — An Israeli diplomat kidnaped by Turkish leftists has written a letter to his wife telling her he is all right and not to worry.

An Israeli Embassy official said Wednesday the wife confirmed the letter was in the handwriting of her husband, Consul-General Ephraim Elrom, 58. She appealed to the kidnapers for his safe return. They have threatened to kill him unless the Turkish government releases all "revolutionaries" it has in jail by Thursday night.

Since the kidnaping on Monday, police have arrested more than 700 leftists. And in a broadening of the crackdown on Wednesday, the government drew up a law making political kidnapings a crime punishable by death.

The Israeli Embassy released the text of Elrom's letter. The wife's appeal was issued through the Turkish news agency.

Officials said Elrom's letter was dated Tuesday and postmarked in Aksaray, a district of Istanbul.

Russians Launch Mars Rocket

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union announced Thursday it has launched a space shot toward Mars and expects it to reach the planet next November.

Named Mars-2 and described as an automatic interplanetary station, the probe was launched in the Soviet Union Wednesday at 7:23 p.m., the official news agency Tass reported.

The United States had scheduled two attempts to photograph Mars closeup this year, but one failed early in its mission.

"The flight of the interplanetary station Mars-2 to the planet Mars will continue for more than six months, Tass said.

The wording did not clarify whether the space station would attempt a soft landing on Mars.

Science Power: Its Hopes and Dangers...

EDITOR'S NOTE — In laboratories around the world scientists are getting closer and closer to giving people control over life and destiny. It is a prospect of great hope. But a prospect also fraught with great danger, and there are those who warn that science may go too far. Following is the first of three articles dealing with the scientific innovations and the moral questions involved in these developments.

By ALTON BLAKESLEE
AP Science Editor

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Dr. James Bonner is a cheerful scientist who is no longer dismayed over a rather dreadful fact:

Every day, after age 35, the average adult loses 100,000 brain cells, known as neurons, which are involved in his or her thinking, his or her memories of things past, and other essential cerebral activities. These nerve cells die off, from aging, from impaired blood circulation or other causes.

At birth, you start out with 10 billion neurons. But you never make any more — they don't divide and reproduce like some other cells, such as skin or liver cells.

Easy arithmetic shows you probably lose 36½ million nerve cells a year, and about one billion cop out in 30 years. The daily loss rate for individuals could be higher or lower, and explain why memory can falter with age, why other faculties fade, why we become senile.

Even if ravages from cancer and heart attacks were stopped, there would be little prospect of many people being able to live a century of healthy, vigorous life if the brain drain continued.

Now there's a possibility of halting this brain drain, and that is only one of numerous potential dramatic new controls over human life that scientists around the world see glimmering in the laboratory which will permit people drastically to widen control over existence and destiny.

Knowledge may come with which to improve your memory . . . make you smarter . . . add 30 to 40 years to the average lifespan . . . prevent or cure cancer . . . prevent genetic defects in children . . . perhaps create human beings far superior in intelligence and physique to the average lot of us now . . .

Dr. Bonner, biologist at the California Institute of Technology, doesn't know how to prevent neurons from dying off.

But he grins amiably over a different prospective solution-of making other brain cells take on the work of the missing neurons.

This possibility exists because every cell in your body contains exactly the same total amount of genetic information, all of the same genes that tell cells what to be and what to do. A liver cell is a liver cell because only specific ones among all the genes are "turned" on and go to work. A nerve cell is a nerve cell because other genes are busy in that cell. And so similarly with bone, skin hair and other specialist cells.

Dr. Bonner's research is concerned with learning what turns genes on, or off. If he and other scientists find the answers, then he foresees the possibility of creating new or substitute nerve cells.

The human brain contains about 100 billion cells altogether. One great body of them is glial cells, which are thought to be mainly structural or supportive cells, though they may also play some roles in learning and memory functions.

If and when one knows precisely what the chemical "switches" are that turn genes on or off, then it could become possible to tell glial cells to stop being themselves, and to become neurons instead. And, maybe, you could switch glial cells into nerve cells at the rate of 100,000 a day, thus replacing the loss of neurons.

The replacement neurons would be capable of storing up new memories and carrying out other activities. While old neurons would keep dying out, some knowledge and memories might fade with them. But, Dr. Bonner remarks, in these times of rapid changes, much of the information we're carrying around within our heads is obsolete anyhow.

Dr. Bonner is quite serious about the possibility of this kind of brain cell control or genetic engineering.

And so are other scientists who are engaged in fundamental studies of why things happen as they do in nature.

But many thoughtful scientists and other citizens are becoming concerned about how to safeguard constructive use of new controls and powers over human life.

Knowledge of the atomic nucleus led to both the A-bomb and to power stations producing electricity for homes and factories. Technology too often has had unexpected boomerang effects, such as the contribution to smog from automobiles, the pollution of lakes and streams by industries producing goods that people welcomed.

So how could society make sure that knowledge of how to control the brain or human inheritable traits might not be misapplied to keep some people in a bondage of stupidity, or to create slaves and automatons for a dictatorial government? Knowledge of how to turn on brain cells might well point the way to controls to turn off brain cells to create an obedient, uncomplaining population of slaves.

The SST: A boondoggle

Apparently the SST, like those proverbial old soldiers who continue to haunt us, is not going to die — maybe not ever. Just as it appeared the battle over the monster had been won, that the monster had been laid to rest, up comes its ugly head again to remind us that those who would destroy this planet in the name of profits are not going to give up all that easily.

While using the economic situation to bolster their scheme to have the SST at any cost, its proponents overlook, or worse, see and ignore, the obvious dangers to the environment that are possible if the machine is built.

Several experts have made dire predictions about possible effects on the climate and the atmosphere, as well as noting that noise pollution may soon become one of our worst problems and that the SST might well contribute to that problem.

A University of California at Berkeley chemist, Dr. Harold Johnson, says that his studies indicate that large-scale supersonic transport flights could cut the shield protecting the earth from the sun's ultraviolet rays in one-half within a period of two years. And he says the hazard is far greater than was previously believed.

A study sponsored last year by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) indicated that world climate might potentially be changed by high-altitude pollution caused by SST exhaust emissions. If, as the study assumed, there were 500 SSTs flying an average of seven hours a day on a worldwide basis, each SST would deposit about one ton of nitric oxide in the stratosphere in each hour of flight.

This residue, according to Johnson, would form a thin, spreading ribbon which would mix with residue from other flights, destroying the ozone that shields us from the sun's ultraviolet rays. It is this dumping of waste products that scientists feel offers a great hazard to our climate, as well as to that shield.

Other studies have indicated that the SST might create serious noise-related problems. This because the SST's sideline noise would extend far into the community, miles beyond the noise exposure area of present jet airliners.

There are, of course, other difficulties. The SST would be a tremendous drain on fossil fuel reserves, using twice as much fuel per passenger as a 747. It is estimated that the SST could increase the United States' annual requirement of crude oil by as much as one-third by 1980.

And there is the problem of the sonic boom. The SST creates a continuous shock wave moving across the land surface, a wave 50 miles wide. Even if the boom were banned by law over U.S. territory, it would strike, on every flight, an estimated 4,000 persons working or traveling at sea. And, while the U.S. government has rarely shown much concern for people living in countries other than the U.S. (and it shows damned little for those who do live here), there is always the problem of that sonic boom striking other than Americans.

There is a theory running around this office (largely propounded by one person) that machines create their own demands. The SST certainly does appear to be one piece of evidence to support that theory.

The machines exist at Boeing to manufacture the SST, therefore we must have the SST. Nothing else will do. It matters not that we don't need it, that we don't want it, that it has the potential of doing us great harm, and there is little to be said for any good it might do us except keep us ahead in that absurd race to see which country can destroy itself the fastest.

But the machines for the SST are there. And the machines which might manufacture low-cost public housing, which might clean up the already damaged environment, which might build a pollution-free form of private transportation, which might build a truly workable form of public transportation, simply are not there.

If this country were truly run in the interests of those who live in this country, the SST would never have come up for consideration — or if it had, it would have been dropped from consideration like a hot potato. But this country is not run for the people; it is run for the profiteers in our society who care for nothing but making another buck and it panders to those caught up in the international game called "race to destruction."

More on foods: natural is best

When you eat natural, whole, unrefined and unprocessed foods (the kind impossible to obtain in dormitories, the Union, hospitals, restaurants and most grocery stores) you can be sure that you will receive all their vital nutrients in their proper balance.

It is extremely difficult to obtain natural foods because of our widespread use of chemical fertilizers and pesticides, which destroy the balance of the soil. Pesticide residues that remain in the soil alter the nutritional balance of plants grown in that soil. For example, calcium and magnesium are reduced by almost all "biocides," and potassium is also affected.

While the chemical sprayers are complementing themselves on developing new superpoisons, they largely overlook the damage being done to soils by some control over poison residues on food, but it has taken no steps to regulate poison residues in soil. Meanwhile, the increased spraying tempo is adding larger and larger amounts of toxic materials to soils. In one study, after five years of orchard spraying, 100 to 175 pounds of DDT was found to remain in the debris and 13 to 105 pounds per acre in the top three inches of soil. The persistence of DDT residues in the soil seems to be inversely related to the amount of organic matter in the soil. After much research, humus (organically-built soil) has been found to be the only known effective treatment for insecticide poisons in soil. It is unfortunate that the farmers who do the most spraying are often those least interested in building up the humus in their soil.

By 1956, insects were found that tolerated DDT dosages 1,000 times greater than those needed to kill their ancestors. Our insecticides are, in effect, creating superinsects with longer lifecycles and greater egg-laying capacity. In spite of the tremendous limitation that insect resistance now imposes and our ignorance of the long-term effects of the newer insecticides, federal, state and local spraying programs have been increasing at an alarming rate. In our present state of ignorance, it is this dangerous trend that seriously threatens our great natural heritage.

It would be foolish to deny that insects are a problem in any farm or garden. However, the greatest foe of the farmer or gardener is poor soil. If he or she is able to build the soil up to a rich, fertile condition, no plant diseases or insects will cause really serious trouble. Pests cannot be ignored, but they will be much easier to deal with.

The key to controlling insect pests is to reestablish the natural balance by building up soil organically. Insects are natural censors, pointing out crops that are improperly nourished. Plants grown on virgin land are attacked by almost no harmful insects. Every organic gardener finds his or her plants suffer less damage, even when neighboring chemical farmers lose half their crops to insects.

It seems that your only alternatives, if you want the kind of food you should have, are to grow your own garden (see J. I. Rodale's "Organic Gardening"); join an organic food cooperative (see Ecological Food Society's ads in several national magazines); start an organic food cooperative where you live (perhaps in conjunction with the guerrilla gardeners in Iowa City, for example); become a guerrilla gardener.

Letters: The Green Room...

To the Editor:

I have long considered self-justification among the most futile of human pursuits. What is written here should not, therefore, be in any way construed as a defense of my play or this promotion of it against those who failed to enjoy either parts or the whole of it. This is rather an indictment of an attitude, a posture, a point of view, a certain bloodless objectivity that analyzes by dissection, denies the whole as being greater than the sum of its parts, dilutes the emotional experience with rhetoric, and reduces reason to a mathematical equation that is oversimplified just enough to negate the magnificent contradiction, confusion, and uncertainty of life itself. It is nothing new to me, this indictment. I have been making it for years. I just feel a need to restate it here.

I got a great deal of pleasure writing this play. When I finished it, I was satisfied with the result. It said what I wished to say about the Living Theatre just the way I wanted to say it. Rereading it occasionally over the years (I wrote it in 1964), it continued to please me. I also enjoyed casting, directing, and producing the play here in Iowa, and the production turned out exactly as I had envisioned it. In other words, I accomplished what I set out to do. I will return to New York with the good feeling of a job well done. I do not mean to suggest that perfection was intended or realized. The notion of perfect happiness or perfect anything, although nonsense, dies hard in all of us. We created God to deal with it, and I would just as soon leave it to Him in the minds of those who still hold Him fast. I let Him go His own merry way a long time ago. Perhaps the biggest villain in all of this perfection business is old Socrates who taught us not only how to think but to think in the first place.

All of that aside, it must first be realized that a play in production and performance is a living thing, and it is subject to all the frailties and inconsistencies of other living things. After all the rehearsing and preparation, it is still subject to moods, illnesses, and had days. As I discovered in the 15 productions in which I have been involved, performances rarely get across what is expected of them and almost never spill over into the sublime and completely mysterious area where the play takes on a life of its own. In the thousand odd performances of The Brig, it only happened four times. I knew it, the actors knew it, and the audience knew it. So far, here in Iowa City, there has been one good performance. There has yet to be a great one. At this writing, there are two more shows to go, but that is really too much to ask in so short a run.

Having an opinion about a performance of a play seen on a given night is like having an opinion of a person met only once. I remain Kenneth Brown, but you might form a much better opinion of me on one day than another. In fact, there is no doubt about it. The Green Room remains The Green Room in much the same way. This is one reason why people disagree as to what precisely is wrong with a play although they most always agree that something is wrong with it. One young woman doing a graduate thesis on the play said that it didn't work as a whole because the inexperienced actors in the cast couldn't pull off the job of being outrageous and ridiculous. The DI reviewer cites three actors as giving impressive performances; they are among the most experienced of all. When I heard that one woman who teaches in the theatre department called the play a piece of shit, I laughed. I was asked why it didn't bother me. A play is a living thing. Some people dislike some things about it; some people dislike others; some people don't like anything about it at all.

Someone asked me why I write and direct plays if I don't care what other people think of them. I care very much what other people think of them. I write and direct plays because I like to write and direct plays. I can think of nothing else I would rather do for a living. I like people to like my plays, and I like people to dislike my plays. I like people to be delated and I like people to be disappointed. The only thing I don't like is apathy. If someone has no feeling about my work, I feel as though I have failed. There is the play, over there on the stage. I don't ask that you like it. I only ask that you go and see it. If you have something to say afterwards, fine. Let's talk about it. If you don't be on your way with all my best wishes.

The DI review was, to my surprise, just what I expected from a university newspaper: bloodless, emotionless, and dead. For the past five years, I have been shifting the scene of my personal comic opera from Yale to Hunter to Hollins to other campuses around the country, and my feelings have not changed or once been contradicted. Creeping objective analysis has done its best to kill everything I've tried to vitalize or seen vitalized. And that goes for radical academia as well as the establishment. The review is reminiscent of the English teacher who didn't like a Ferlinghetti poem because he couldn't explain what it meant. He loved Coleridge however because the lines set themselves up to be torn apart and analyzed. I understood the review and agreed with most of what it said, but what did the reviewer feel? Did he laugh? Did he cry? Did the play remind him of someone or something? Did he have a human response to the living thing? I have to quote a little of it to show you what I mean.

"The Green Room sets up a number of changing referential frames which create a sense of mild confusion and ambiguity, not unlike that of the uneasy and shifting state of affairs occurring on the level of personal drama. The intended structural factors affecting the sometimes conflicting, sometimes unifying framing arrive in the forms of an author commentator, five dancers, and a flutist-vocalist, Patrick Purswell." Come on man, get off it! These are living people up on the stage sweating real sweat trying to entertain you and tell you something about me and myself! React like a person, not a textbook! And get this one: "Despite all of the nice touches, TGR does not produce the effect Brown evidently strove for." How the hell do you know what I strove for? Especially when I don't know myself. In case you don't know it, there is no such thing as an effect of universal proportions. Any artist who tells me he strove for an effect is quickly going to lose my respect. I strive to present the show with all its mysteries and inconsistencies as well as I can. That's all I do. You want something predictable that works the same way every time, get yourself a Broadway musical. It will be as dead and sexless as your review. Well, anyway, this was what I was supposed to be striving for: "presenting a caricatured tableau of intermittent absurdity and consistent disjointedness that strikes a somber note when the compounded force eventually turns far enough on itself to expose the initially disguised gravity of the given social predicament." I could hardly figure that out, let alone strive for it. I wonder, are you really trying to communicate something to your readers, or are you going for an "A" in complicated sentence structure? Then there's a little lecture on how I might have achieved what I strove for followed by this: "This is the cause for TGR beginning to drag after about an hour." He almost actually said something, but he couldn't quite bring himself to do it. If the play dragged, say it dragged, not that it began to drag. Tell me what you feel!

You can't put my plays in a box and explain away what they are. The Green Room is the Green Room with its dance, acting, and music. It isn't about anything but itself which is the Living Theatre as I saw it seven years ago, which is not to be confused with what the Living Theatre really was seven years ago. If you think the dance was intrusive, it was intrusive to you because it was made that way. If the music was distracting, it was distracting because that's the way it was that night for you. If you liked the acting, it was because you liked the acting. Take it for what it is. If you want to make something else out of it, write your own damn play.

To the Editor:

Like most well-meaning opponents of welfare, Kristine Roesch failed to realize that "her governmentally subsidized housing (Hawkeye Court), her husband's subsidized education, as well as all other governmental services she receives," qualifies her as "a welfare recipient of the first order." (quoted from James Lynch's letter — DI, May 14 — in criticism of Ms. Roesch's letter opposing the Dum-Dum Daycare Defendants — DI, May 7.)

Now would such realization undercut and nullify her argument against public welfare? In other words, would it be hypocrisy for her — or for any others of us in similar situations — to maintain such a position?

If one demands such services — e.g., subsidized mass transit systems, tax-supported education, public utilities, public housing, etc., ad nauseum — as some kind of "right," which is to be exorted from all taxpayers (whether or not they favor such programs), then there definitely is an inconsistency involved. Anyone who demands government services — which means: the property, income, and lives of others — as some kind of unearned "right," definitely has undercut his opposition to welfare, on principle, regardless of the nature of the specific government service (i.e., looted values) he wishes to be provided with. Such a person, every bit as much as the DumDum Daycare Defendants, is being — whether he cares to admit it or not — a welfareist, a looter, a parasite, a criminal (choose the synonym you feel most comfortable with).

If, on the other hand, one opposes — as a matter of PRINCIPLE — all forms of taxation (and tax-supported programs), then it is not a contradiction to accept such services. This is so precisely because one is acting on the principle of RETRIBUTION. In other words, while no man has the right to coerce values from others and claim that their "obligation" to "serve" him makes the coercion morally right, everyman has the right to the retribution of those values (or their value-equivalents) coerced from him and to morally, consistently oppose the policies and institutions of coercion.

The GI Bill of Rights is a good example of this principle in operation. The draft is only one of the more obviously immoral forms of taxation: men's lives (not just "mere" property) are confiscated (for two years, four years, or forever) in order to "spare" the rest of us from having to cough up the full market cost of a volunteer army. Out of whose hides is the defrayment of the "hidden costs" taken? You guessed it: the hides of the draftees, who are miserably underpaid (a woman on ADC has a higher income). Are they morally entitled to take the GI Bill of Rights benefits and still oppose welfare and the draft? You bet!

In general, however, there is a very serious question which every person who opposes government (tax-supported) institutions and services, on principle, and yet patronizes some of them, must ask himself: "Am I willing to support (in whatever way appropriate) a return to a free market society — one with voluntary charity, a volunteer army, private education, privately owned roads, etc. — which would abolish the very tax-coerced benefits I am now receiving?"

If your answer is "yes," then congratulations, for you are morally in the clear. If your answer is "no," however, then consider yourself (as a minimum) morally and philosophically disarmed, without a leg to stand on, as you attempt to tackle so specific an issue as daycare centers.

In closing, I would like to briefly comment upon the following remark made by Police Court Judge Joseph Thornton during the sentencing of the 7): "I cannot conceive of the thought process that could justify the taking over of property to which you had no claim."

I must concur, Judge Thornton: it does not compute for me either. Yet the manifestations of such a "thought process" are extremely pervasive in our society today: the government policies of taxation, eminent domain, and the selective service system are but three particularly evil examples. Furthermore, as irrational and "inconceivable" as such a thought process might seem, Judge Thornton, there is a very clear motivation behind it all: THE DESIRE FOR THE UNEARNED. And in the name of JUSTICE, JUDGE, we must condemn and oppose injustice — the seeking and the granting of the unearned — in its every variant, moral-spiritual and legal-material, if we are to deserve the title: JUST MEN. Otherwise, none of us — in our individual capacities as judges of men's characters and actions — will have a leg to stand on, either!

To the Editor:

Last Thursday's editorial page cartoon (depicting Christ in the temple, overturning the tables of the money-changers, vilifying and being vilified by the "liberal Pharisees"), though laughably inaccurate with regards to the Bible and ridiculously far from reality with regards to the political situation in Iowa City or the United States, did at least prove one thing: this town does contain elements possessed of the dream, the delusion — no, the downright EGO — to identify themselves with Jesus Christ and proclaim themselves the new Saviors of the world. If I may be so bold as to ask them: now that

Your Second Coming has at long last materialized, when do you plan on establishing the Kingdom? Will it be within the next 24 hours, or will we have to wait 36?

And now that I have my typewriter out, please allow me to extend my congratulations to those who threw rocks at Iowa Book and Supply, the Field House and other buildings, and the Highway Patrol. Right on, fellas. Every missile hurled was a direct blow against racism, sexism, and the war in Vietnam, as evidenced by the fact that Richard Nixon was so impressed by your efforts he's decided to pull all U.S. troops out of Southeast Asia effective tomorrow.

The muckraker: a reason why

After this round of riots, demonstrations, protests, or whatever the "Des Moines Register" is calling them this year, I tumbled into the inevitable clump of glassy-eyed faculty asking why. Couldn't understand the violence. Didn't understand how college students could be THAT alienated. Blamed it on the war, the government, even the sheriff, but mainly no one they knew and certainly not themselves.

It didn't occur to them that the faculty is the single greatest source of student alienation. It didn't occur to them that there must be a fatal flaw in an educational system which drives students into the streets. Of course, the war. Of course, the man-who-gave-us-HUAC, of late in the White House. Of course, the sheriff and his mad code of honor and vendetta. But his faculty too. The faculty in particular. Because the faculty do it every day.

Trouble is that students are here to grow and learn, but faculty are not here primarily to help students grow and learn. Faculty are here in an insane climb for a superficially rational version of professional prestige.

You got to get professional recognition to be promoted. You get recognition by publishing. To publish, you need leisure. To get leisure, you need time off from teaching, particularly undergrads. To get time off from teaching undergrads, you let students teach each other. But you require them to pay full fees as if you were still teaching them. Because a surplus is necessary to subsidize your leisure for "research." Also, to keep the surplus high, you make classes for freshmen much, much larger than classes for Ph.D.'s. The students who need the most encouragement and individual attention receive the least, while those who presumably can work on their own get the lion's share of your time.

How can students help being alienated if the organization and its personnel are systematically screwing them and ignoring them at the same time? And all because of an absurd notion of faculty prestige and quality. Which is based largely on the notion that every professor is a potential Pasteur, Ha.

You, dear faculty, are lucky the men in the dorms didn't decide to march into University Heights.

As long as we operate on the notion of a faculty-centered and not a student-centered university, there will be heart-breaking alienation among the people who make it all possible.

Nixon Checkmates Europe Troop Cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's forces scored a decisive victory Wednesday in rejecting the first in a series of Senate proposals to cut U.S. forces in Europe.

By an unexpectedly large margin of 63 to 26, the Senate defeated a proposal by Sen. Gaylord Nelson (D-Wis.) for a phased 50 per cent cutback of the 300,000 U.S. troops over a three-year period unless East-West talks start promptly on the possibility of mutual withdrawals.

The heavy vote underscored the view of White House backers that they would be able to block all moves for a unilateral U.S. troop reduction. Principal target for administration forces is an amendment to draft-extension legislation offered by the Senate majority leader, Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.). This would reduce U.S. forces by half by the end of this year.

Chef threat to the administration's no-compromise position and its desire to defeat the Mansfield amendment directly was a bipartisan proposal urging U.S. talks on possible troop cuts, both with its European allies and the Communist bloc. It would require the President to report back to Congress Sept. 15 and every six months thereafter.

IEC Reports Employment Rate Up

In April 1970, the unemployment rate was 3.4 per cent of the total work force of 1,229,300.

Elite S. Viet Commandos Hunt NLF Base Near Laos

SAIGON (AP) — A 700-man force of elite South Vietnamese commandos has begun a hunt for a major North Vietnamese base in the central highlands near the Laotian border, military spokesmen reported Wednesday.

The commandos, highly trained infantrymen, were flown from Saigon Tuesday after captured soldiers and defectors told allied intelligence officers that the North Vietnamese had 50 tanks hidden in caves there.

The scouting operation centered on the southern Laos border 10 miles northwest of Ben Het.

A South Vietnamese outpost called Fire Base 6, just to the southwest of Ben Het, withstood a 17-day siege last month by North Vietnamese forces operating from two base areas on the Laos side of the Border. The bases are known as the B3 command front and Fire Area 609.

A spokesman in Pleiku, Capt. Le Van Duc was asked if the commandos would cross into Laos and replied: "Maybe, but I'm not sure."

The bases are about 275 miles north of Saigon just above the border juncture of Laos, South Vietnam and Cambodia. An important segment of North Vietnam's Ho Chi Minh supply trail ends in that area.

The Creative Switch
Why has the Mamiya/Sekor DTL become the favorite 35mm SLR camera of campus photographers? Because you're more interested in creative possibilities than record making. The Creative Switch allows you to choose between two separate exposure meter systems, and guarantees perfect exposures every time. Why two? Because front lighted subjects are measured easiest with an "averaged" meter system. With back and side lighting you need a "spot" meter system to read the most important part of the picture. Most fine 35mm SLR cameras have one of these systems; the Mamiya/Sekor DTL has combined both with the Creative Switch. Who cares about exposure if you're only interested in taking pictures of the baby or Aunt Agatha? But the most interesting pictures usually have tricky lighting and you want to capture on film what you see in your mind. See your photo dealer for a practical demonstration. The DTL is priced from $185 plus case. If you want a folder that will tell you all you need to know before you buy, send the coupon below to:

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs obtained 33-year-old catcher Chris Cannizzaro from San Diego Wednesday for infielder Garry Jesteadt and an undisclosed amount of money. The Cubs also placed Joe Pepitone on the disabled list. In making the deal, vice president John Holland of the Cubs secured an experienced back-up man for ailing catcher Randy Hundley. Hundley has appeared in only five games since injuring his right knee during a spring training game last March 12. Cannizzaro comes to the Cubs after playing in 21 games for the Padres. He has a .190 batting average. Pepitone, an outfielder-first baseman, was put on the disabled list for 15 days. He has bone chips in his left elbow.

5 Ruggers Honored

Five members of the Iowa Rugby Club have been selected to represent the state of Iowa in an international touring match in Des Moines Saturday.

They will play the Witte Paven touring team from Holland. This touring side has seven players who have played on the Holland International side, the highest possible rugby honor in Holland.

The five Iowa players include Ken Kekke, Pete Ferguson, Tom Altmeier, Kent Grieshaber and Francis Pinsky. They will play at 2:30 at Tower Park, 50th and Hickman in Des Moines.

Kekke, one of the co-founders of the Iowa Rugby Club and currently co-captain, will play outside center. Ferguson is a former captain of the Iowa side and is currently coach of the club. He was previously selected to play in the Iowa test matches and was on the 1968 Midwest Rugby Union representative side.

Altmeier, a former all-state football, basketball and track star at Newton High School and later a Little All-American football player at Luther College, has been a mainstay of the Iowa pack for three years. He will play second row with Ferguson, a tandem that is reputed to be one of the best in the country.

Grieshaber has been playing with the Iowa club since its inception, and has been previously selected to play in the Iowa test matches, has been a member of the Midwest Rugby Union representative side and has been a Rugby All-American. He will play wing.

Pinsky has been playing with the Iowa club for three years and has usually played wing forward. This season, however, he has been shifted to hooker and is currently acknowledged to be the best hooker in the state.

The remainder of the select side has been chosen from players from Luther, Iowa State, Palmer College, Quad Cities and Des Moines.

Lawrence Dodging Linemen, the Draft

Reprinted by permission of the Calgary Herald. Lawrence is a former football player at the University of Iowa, but transferred to Miami University after his junior season because of personal problems with former Hawkeye coach Ray Nagel. He later dropped out of Miami and signed with Calgary of the Canadian Football League. This article appeared in the Calgary Herald on March 17, 1971.

By HAL WALKER
Herald Sports Editor
Calgary Stampeder back-up quarterback Larry Lawrence declared "I'm not ready to go down the Ho Chi Minh Trail" and said he would prefer to be a draft dodger than submit to pending induction on the United States armed forces when he spoke to the Points After junior football luncheon at the Holiday Inn.

Lawrence, the brash 21-year-old rookie who gained much popularity and displayed a fine potential as back-up man to Jerry Keeling with the Stampede last season, said he was unalterably opposed to the war in Vietnam.

"I don't think the United States should be over there as an imperialistic country. I don't want you to think I want Communism but the United States is spending too much money on defense. The money could be better used for pollution and other things," Larry told a hushed, near-capacity gathering of football fans.

"I'm not ready to go down the Ho Chi Minh Trail," the former quarterback from the University of Iowa said. "Maybe I can get a job helping some of the unfortunate people in Miami Beach." Lawrence's expressions on the Vietnam situation and his own involvement came after he had finished his speech and invited questions from the audience.

"What is your draft status?" a voice asked. "I'll have to wait until June 30," Lawrence said, "when I report for my medical physical, but it may be that I will be able to thank the Hamilton football team for a concussion they gave me, all of which is down on my medical report." (Lawrence was referring to the severe head injury he sustained last season when he was clothed in Tiger-Cats' defensive half-back Johnny Williams, a former Calgary player.)

"I don't know if I could play here if I were a draft dodger," he said.

Lawrence, who is currently studying commerce at the University of Calgary, confirmed to me after the luncheon that he would, indeed, become a draft dodger if induction became imminent. He said he had not signed a Stampeder contract and repeated "I don't know whether I can play here as a draft dodger."

Lawrence spoke about the relationship of father-son and said one of his regrets was that he never got to know his father better in his formative years. "I had many idols in my youth and Stan Musial was one of them. I had bubble gum baseball cards which J. Paul Getty would have loved to own. But things have changed. It is time for parents to refocus, or funnel their efforts into hopes for their children. Parents exercise a major influence on their children."

In the course of his address Lawrence defended the rights of people such as himself to wear their hair long. He was making reference to an article in the Canadian supplement that appeared in the Herald which he felt was unfair to people like Joe Namath and Derek Sanderson. "I can defend their right to live their life," Larry said "...when I look back on some of the things I did..."

He concluded by saying "...this is a long lecture from a 21-year-old hippie." Then he invited questions.
The first question from the floor was about Larry's long hair. "What does Jim Duncan think about it?" he was asked. "Well you saw me with splinters in my backside last season, didn't you?"

The young quarterback was saying, following the luncheon, that his apprenticeship in Canadian football last season had left him with a hypertension which had brought on constant migraine headaches. "It became a gradual build-up, induced by competition, probably, but it was something I had to live with. Then when I got that knock in Hamilton, things got worse." If Lawrence does ignore his draft call it would eliminate his dreams of playing in the National Football League in the future.

Eagle Answers Your Questions About Ground Beef...

Eagle Meals Are A Better Buy For 3 Good Reasons...

1. QUALITY BONDED
2. HONESTLY LABELED
3. DISCOUNT PRICED

Here are answers to the questions our customers most often ask about ground beef... WHAT ARE THE DIFFERENT "GRADES" OR TYPES OF GROUND BEEF? AND WHAT DO THEY MEAN? All ground meat has been... as is today... a combination of best cuts blended with leaner beef. The leaner the mixture, the less waste in cooking, consequently, the higher price on the leaner product. To be more accurate in our labeling we use "Round Quality" and "Chuck Quality" as descriptive phrases to let you know that "Chuck Quality" and "Round Quality" are the same products many supermarkets call Ground Chuck and Ground Round, WHICH KIND IS BEST? That of course depends on what you want to cook, and on your own taste and preferences. But in any instance, we think it's always best to know exactly what you're buying... and at Eagle, you always know because of our "Truth-in-Meat-Labeling" policy. So you can count on getting what you want, and you can count on saving too. Because Eagle also offers Everyday Low Discount Meat Prices, so you can relax about savings whenever you shop.
