Pakistan

Whitewash?

Pakistan has not been the issue since the catastrophic events that led to the end of hostilities this past spring. With no enemies or major enemies, the government has been able to focus its attention on economic development and other domestic issues. A recent trip to the country by several members of the United States Congress has received little attention in the Pakistani press. This is in stark contrast to the extensive coverage given to similar visits by members of the U.S. Congress to other countries in the region.

Not surprisingly, the Pakistani government has been quick to downplay the significance of the visits. In a press conference held by members of the Pakistani Congress, a spokesperson stated that the visits were purely for the purpose of exchange and cooperation, and that the Pakistani government had no intention of using the visits to lobby for any specific economic or political benefits.

The Pakistani government's stance is consistent with its general policy of non-aligned neutrality, which it has maintained since the end of the Cold War. This policy has helped to shield Pakistan from the worst effects of the ongoing global economic crisis, and has allowed the country to focus its efforts on economic development and poverty alleviation.

In conclusion, the Pakistani government's stance on the visits is typical of its general approach to international relations. While it is clear that the visits were intended to strengthen ties with the United States, the Pakistani government has been careful to avoid any overt display of support for any specific political or economic agenda. This approach is likely to continue, as Pakistan's leadership remains committed to maintaining its non-aligned position.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor,

Good read: "Withering Chronology of 1600s..." by Jordan T. Petz. The article provides a detailed and informative overview of the major events and figures of the 1600s century, with particular emphasis on the Tudor period and the English Civil War.

Your article brought to mind a few thoughts about the political and social climate of the 1600s. It is clear that the period was marked by great turmoil and uncertainty, with the monarchy struggling to maintain its grip on power in the face of growing opposition from the common people.

We are the wealthiest nation in the world yet we are poor in jobs for our young people. We have the highest rate of poverty in the world. It is time to start taking steps to address this problem.

The United States has a long and complicated relationship with South Africa. We have struggled to balance our desire to support democracy and human rights with our commitment to maintaining economic ties with the country. The recent election of a new government in South Africa offers hope for a more stable and prosperous future.
