Hope to revive anti-war spirit

WASHINGTON — A rally near downtown became the setting for Vice President Walter Mondale's first public appearance following his most recent trip to Vietnam, the setting for the vice president's first public appearance since the last trip to Vietnam, the setting for the vice president's first public appearance since the last trip to Vietnam.

In an attempt to reinvigorate interest in the Vietnam War, Mondale announced his intention to bring American troops home by the end of his presidency. In a speech to thousands of anti-war protesters, Mondale said, "I believe in peace and I believe in Vietnam."

"We must end this war and bring our troops home," Mondale said. "It is time for the United States to take a stand against war and for the people of Vietnam to have their say."

Mondale's announcement was met with a mix of reactions. Some lauded his stance, while others criticized his decision. The move to withdraw US troops from Vietnam was viewed as a step towards peace, but also as a betrayal of US allies who had fought for the US side.

"Mondale's move is a bold one," said Senator John Kerry. "It is clear that the US must end its involvement in Vietnam."

"We cannot allow a small group of men to dictate our foreign policy," added Representative John Conyers. "Mondale's decision is a giant step towards ending the Vietnam War."

Mondale's announcement was made during a rally in Washington DC, where thousands of anti-war protesters had gathered. The rally was organized by the anti-war group Veterans for Peace in Vain.

"This is a momentous occasion," said Vietnam war veteran William Westlake. "I remember the Vietnam War vividly, and I am grateful to see the end of it."

"Mondale's decision is a giant step towards ending the Vietnam War," added Vietnam war veteran Mary Ann Healy. "I remember the Vietnam War vividly, and I am grateful to see the end of it."

"I hope Mondale's move is a sign of things to come," said anti-war activist Jane Fonda. "I hope this is the beginning of the end of the Vietnam War."

"I am happy to see the end of the Vietnam War," added anti-war activist Jane Fonda. "I hope this is the beginning of the end of the Vietnam War."

Student Power

By Jim Sutton

Former U of I Student Daily President

Red power is the power of students to protect and promote their own interests. An obvious form of this power may be seen in any city's student ghetto. If the people in this household choose to set their own rules, rules over their own existence, students are in effect making rules over their own lives. In fact, they are changing the world.

Because many student interests are essentially based on their power in the community, you should consider the following issues.

- Instead of working to change rules at housing, students are concentrating on existing
- Instead of working to pass new student rules, students are concentrating on existing

Most of the new student rules are based on the tradition of the studentorganisms. Sometimes these rules will change the community, but the community is always in control, because it is their community.

Because of the students' power, changes in the community are not necessarily revolutions. Therefore, students are not living in a revolution, but in a new world.

- Instead of working to change rules at housing, students are concentrating on existing
- Instead of working to pass new student rules, students are concentrating on existing

- Instead of working to change rules at housing, students are concentrating on existing
- Instead of working to pass new student rules, students are concentrating on existing

So, in summary, the power of students is not necessarily revolutionary, but it is always in control, because it is their community.

What is new about these issues is that student interest in the community is no longer separate from being minor, or even ineffective, but is now part of the community.

My impressions are primarily based on an interview with Professor S. Lee in Beijing, China. It was one of the highlights of my recent trip to China. It was an extremely enlightening experience.

During the interview, Professor S. Lee spoke about the Chinese culture and its influence on the Chinese people. He also discussed the Chinese economy and its growth over the past few years. The Chinese people are very hardworking and they are making great strides in improving their standard of living.

One of the highlights of my trip was visiting the Great Wall of China. It was an incredible experience to see this ancient wonder of the world.

Another highlight was meeting with Chinese students. They were very friendly and interested in learning about American culture.

Overall, my impressions of China were positive. The Chinese people are proud of their culture and their country, and they work hard to keep it strong.

The gay scene in California

In November, 1979, homosexuals fought against the restrictive California State Board of Equal Rights and Liberties and made sure we have a gay rights movement. This movement was called the California Gay Rights Group. They worked hard for gay rights and were successful in passing the Gay Rights Act of 1979, and helped to improve the gay scene in California.

The California Gay Rights Group was successful in passing the Gay Rights Act of 1979, which was a major victory for the gay community.

Muskie questions new court nominee

WASHINGTON — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said Friday that he remains unconvinced that Judge Robert H. Bork is the right choice for the Supreme Court.

In an interview in which he expressed reservations about the role of the Court in national affairs, Muskie said the hearings on Bork's nomination "were not the kind of hearings that should have been held in public." He added: "This is one of the reasons I want a change in the way the Court is chosen."

In a statement issued after the interview, Muskie said he was "concerned" about the length of the hearings and the failure of Bork to answer "straightforward questions." He said he was "concerned" about the lack of "interest in the Court's history" by Bork.

Wet ball hurt Iowa passing

BY LEONARD M. JAEGER

Iowa's punt coverage was a class act. Not one of Minnesota's five punts was returned by the Hawkeyes. Iowa's punters were well protected by a masterful line and the punters were very accurate.

Iowa's defense was also excellent. They stopped Minnesota's running game and the Minnesota quarterback was under constant pressure.

Iowa's offense was not as good. They had a few possessions in the red zone but could not convert.

Duffy: Iowa defended us well

BY WILLIAM B. DUFFY

The Iowa defense was excellent. They held the Minnesota offense to only 215 yards.

The only disappointment was Iowa's offense. They had a chance to score late in the game but could not do it.

Iowa's special teams were very good. Their punts were strong and their kicks were well placed.

Iowa's defense was very strong. They had four sacks and eight tackles for loss.

The first POW: His life as prisoner

TUCSON, Ariz., — The first American pilot to be held prisoner by the Viet Cong has returned to his native city. The father of the man was George Fryelt Jr., who was forced to march 100 miles in the heat of the sun. The POW was reported to be in good health when he arrived.

In 1961, George Fryelt Jr., who was 21 years old, was captured by the Viet Cong while on an Air Force mission. He was held for six months and then released, but not before being tortured and beaten. He was later rescued by the Air Force and returned to the United States.

The POW's father, George Fryelt Sr., said his son had been treated well by the Viet Cong and had been given food and water regularly. He said his son was in good health when he returned.

The POW is now recovering at home in Tucson and will be reunited with his family. The family thanked the Air Force for its efforts in rescuing their son.

In 1962, the Air Force launched a major operation to rescue POWs held by the Viet Cong. The operation, codenamed Operation Ranch Hand, was a success and resulted in the release of many POWs.

The POW's release is a reminder of the ongoing conflict in Vietnam and the sacrifices made by American soldiers and their families. The POW's return home is a welcome sight for his family and a sign of hope for the future.
