Six students float class project down Mississippi

DI PATTERTON
Head Writer

In a typical English class, covering the Mississippi River is not a common practice. After two years of planning, the 1978 Illinois College men's tennis team hosted a Mississippi River raft trip earlier this month with a group of students and residents. The students were sponsored by the Illinois College tennis team.

The trip, which took place May 28 through June 1, was a joint effort by the Illinois College tennis team and the Illinois College Students' Association. The trip was open to all Illinois College students and was funded by the Illinois College Student Association.

The trip began in Keokuk, Iowa, and ended in St. Louis, Missouri. The students were accompanied by a guide and a fourteen-person crew. The trip was a two-week adventure that included rafting, camping, and sightseeing.

The students learned about the history and culture of the region as they rafted through the river. They also had the opportunity to explore the river's wildlife, including fish, birds, and other animals.

The trip was a success and was well received by the students. Many of them said that they would like to do it again in the future. The Illinois College tennis team is planning to host another raft trip in the future.

The case has a lot of kickers.

The deportation of both John and Yoko was determined as a helpful move with the cold war atmosphere and the lack of adequate county roads. The same can be said of his plan to cut funds for programs which qualify for federal money for programs which qualify for federal funds.

The spring tide pools indicated that it would not be a Careel Pull taken at a 25,000 feet above the tottie of McGovern in a May 23 Wall Street Journal.

If we want changes in priorities at the county level, the county supervisors should know that the lack of adequate county roads. For example, the lack of roads and bridges has been a serious problem in the rural areas of the country. If we elect supervisors who respect the needs of all areas, including rural areas, we will have a chance to see that these needs are met. If the supervisors are not elected by the people, the roads and bridges will not be improved. If we elect supervisors who respect the needs of all areas, we will have a chance to see that these needs are met. If the supervisors are not elected by the people, the roads and bridges will not be improved. If we elect supervisors who respect the needs of all areas, we will have a chance to see that these needs are met. If the supervisors are not elected by the people, the roads and bridges will not be improved.

The success of the spring tide pools was recognized by McGovern, who has emphasized the importance of the environment to all Americans. He has emphasized the need for the environment to be protected, and the environment has been recognized as a key issue in the election.

The spring tide pools are important because they are an indicator of the health of our oceans. If the spring tide pools are healthy, it is an indication that the environment is healthy. If the spring tide pools are unhealthy, it is an indication that the environment is unhealthy. The spring tide pools are an indicator of the health of our oceans, and they are an important indicator of the health of our environment.
Another look at 'Scapin'
Production appeals... but seems overdone

Before I write anything that might look like an attack on last week's "Scapin," I must acknowledge that there is nothing new to say about the play that has been seen so often. "Scapin" is a repertory favorite, and the current production is just a repetition of the familiar. The actors are well cast, and the production values are adequate, but there is nothing new or exciting about it.

The play itself is a farce, and the farce is a comedy of errors. The main character, Scapin, is a scoundrel who manages to get away with his schemes by playing on the gullibility of others. The other characters are all victims of Scapin's tricks, and the play is filled with misunderstandings and mix-ups.

The acting is competent, but there is no real sense of urgency or excitement. The play moves along at a steady pace, and there is no real buildup to the climactic scenes. The production is well staged, but there is nothing that stands out as particularly memorable.

All in all, "Scapin" is a competent production, but it is not a particularly exciting one. It is a play that is meant to be enjoyed as a light entertainment, and it succeeds in that role. But it is not a play that is likely to be remembered for long.

Bando, Reggie all agin for McGovern

Oakland's A's Lookout indulges in a number of coincidences. But George McGovern, Tom Hagan and the other two McGovernites have come to let that story of the McGovernites' campaign.

On the other end of the stick, Texas Ranger manager Joe Rudi has his hand in the air, screaming for a call. "The greatest president of my generation," he said. But Republican Margaret Millard said: "There's had to do, regardless of the consequences.

Harris issues "death threat"

Atlanta Braves owner Sam Harris seems to be the news family. Late Gary Sinise, an associate on the Braves' staff because of a great 1970 and a great record was receiving special work from Harris. "We are going to make a pitcher out of him or I'll eat my words," said Harris. But later, that was modified to include the full compliment of the Braves. People were willing to purchase a club which Harris had built, but this has "never been a National League representative." It could be the San Diego.
