WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill to increase the commercial rate of lead-shot, easily removable shotgun shells for certain purposes was approved by the House Judiciary Committee Thursday.

Road approved

The Iowa City Parking and Zoning Committee approved a new east-west street for the secluded Melrose Lake property.

Robert Thompson, sworn of the land, has been trying to get the city to build an access road to his 50 acres of land. A new road, according to Thompson, will cost $15,000.

Residents of the area have been fighting to keep the Thompson land and the adjoining Novel property from being rezoned for commercial use.

The new road will run parallel to the Thompson property and the Novel property.

Thompson's property is within Iowa City limits,
but the intended use is in University Heights.

Approval of this new road would drain the area and start construction. Ken Mulheren, member of the parking and zoning committee, said,
"There was no absolute necessity for this road.

Uranium windfall

Much of the raw ore will remain during operating, the company plans to sell 150,000 tons of uranium ore.

The federal government subsequently has been unable to prosecute the power-plant permitting cases, and the Interior Department has not brought new prosecution against the company. Symphony concert tonight

Three works, four composers

Tonight's concert by the University Symphony Orchestra will be the last of its season. Examples of orchestral excellence in three works will be performed by the orchestra, conducted by George Schuman, Professor of Music. Peter Lewis's "Piano Concerto" for the piano and orchestra, with the world premiere of a new work by composer Shachmarn, will round out the evening's program. Both works will be performed by the University Symphony Orchestra led by George Schuman.

Schuman, an acknowledged master of contemporary music, has been criticized for his handling of the orchestra. His works have been known to perform extra-ordnary effects in live concerts. This is the last concert of the season at the University Symphony Orchestra, and the orchestra will be lead by the distinguished conductor.

If you're a fan of the University Symphony Orchestra, be sure to attend tonight's concert. It will be an unforgettable experience. For more information on future concerts, please visit the University Symphony Orchestra's website.
