UI officials propose to make tuition, fee structure ‘equitable’

WASHINGTON (AP) - White House House Speaker Thomas DeLay on Wednesday introduced legislation that would stop the growth of federal aid to public schools. The proposal is designed to eliminate the current system of providing aid based on student performance and replace it with a system that provides aid based on the needs of students and the quality of education they receive.

The problem, DeLay said, is that the current system of providing aid is based on the number of students in a school, rather than the quality of education they receive. This means that schools with a large number of low-income students receive more aid than schools with a smaller number of low-income students, even if the schools are providing better education.

DeLay’s proposal would replace the current system with one that provides aid based on the number of low-income students in a school and the percentage of students who are proficient in reading and math. This would ensure that schools with a large number of low-income students and a low percentage of proficient students receive less aid than schools with a smaller number of low-income students and a higher percentage of proficient students.

The proposal would also make it easier for states to use the aid for purposes other than K-12 education, such as higher education and teacher training.

In testimony to the House Appropriations Committee on Wednesday, DeLay said, "This is an issue that has been a priority for me for a long time. I believe that we need to ensure that our children have the best possible education, and that means providing aid that is based on need and quality, rather than just the number of students in a school."

DeLay’s proposal is expected to be introduced in the House this week and is likely to be taken up by the Senate in the coming weeks.

Women who get German Measles while they are pregnant may have only a 50-50 chance of having a normal baby.

Not very good odds.

During the last German Measles epidemic, more than 30,000 babies died and at least that many more were crippled for life.

The tragedy is that it didn't have to happen.

Most of all, contagious virus is spread by younger children of school age who can be immunized with a safe, effective vaccine.

But the vaccine is useless unless we use it.

Another rubric is almost sure to come. All children desperately need to be vaccinated in order to being ending to this preventable scourge.

Once it starts, there's no stopping it.

"Did you know that there is a wonder drug that prevents babies from being born blind, deaf, mentally defective and dead from German measles?"

"Yes, and the wonder is that people won't use it."

Planning group faces loss of 1/5 of funds

In a last-ditch effort, the Johnson County Health Planning Commission (JCRPC) is facing the loss of one-fifth of its funds for the current fiscal year due to a policy change in a state agency which distributes communal centers for health planning.

At least four of the commission's executive board members will meet in Des Moines Thursday to decide on their next step. The OHP and the Children's Action (OHP) and the Children's Action Department (OHP) have been asked to attend a meeting with the commission.

Robert Hildebrand, JCRPC director, and Monday the commission recommended that a OHP division be assigned to help the state in distributing funds.

Skylab program, too much money?

Right in the middle of the news reports that Work-Study funds have to be cut, our action program is in trouble. Our program is in need of financial support.

While people are fighting the rising costs of food, rent, and the price of all the space programs, more and more people are buying into a sick capitalism. The real irony is that the space program deserves the bad PR while the people of this country deserve better than they are getting from the present administration.

When the late President Kennedy provided the prompt goals and goals of the space program in the early sixties, the country's domestic status was relatively stable. It isn't any more the space program goes on.

The Skylab project will cost a total of $2.02 billion. While many of us in support of such a plan say that we can learn "immeasurable things" about our satellites, these trips, they don't seem to be worth the money involved.

Programs for the defense department such as the Trident submarine and the B-1 bomber program were not as expensive. Our own senator, Harold Hughes stated at the time that for the cost of one Trident we could build the housing and sewage needs for a town the size of Des Moines that amounted to 5 billion.

We now no getting space station with three men aboard, that has all the equipment to provide for some fantastic knowledge. The problem is that we probably would survive without that knowledge, but the flight of the working class people is just that, survival.

There aren't enough jobs to go around defining the choices we have to fill our empty cameras and possibly pass up opportunities for advancement because they are having enough trouble making ends meet. The cost of education is becoming prohibitive to some of those who have to believe that our government is doing their bit for the country.

I hope that sometime we start to worry more about the people right here in our own backyard and stop chasing moon-men, at least for a while.

What are those antennas up on the Engineering Building? It is said that there's something called "antennas". At least one antenna looks like a big airplane, but it's an antenna on a television tower.

The large red and white tower is an P.M. antenna. One of the university's antennas is the biggest in the United States; it is used for television. The other, larger antenna, is on a hill and picks up television signals.
