Israeli war

By The Associated Press

The Israeli military command claimed its tanks blasted their way through Syrian defenses Thursday and were rumbling along the road to Damascus. Defense Minister Moshe Dayan predicted lightning victory but did not say if the Syrian capital was the objective.

In other developments:

—At the United Nations in New York, Foreign Minister Mohamed H. el-Zayyat of Egypt said a communique to him from Cairo told of 500 persons being killed in air attacks on Port Said, Cairo suburbs and Egypt's northern delta.

—Pentagon sources said the United States was preparing Thursday to rush tons of ammunition to Israel.

—Cairo radio said Egyptian tanks punched farther into the Sinai peninsula to wipe out a fleeing column of Israeli armor.

—In the naval war, Syria and Israel reported conflicting versions of a battle off the Syrian coast. The Greek Merchant Marine Ministry said an Israeli gunboat sank one of its ships, killing two crewmen.

—In the air war, Syrian and Egyptian communique claimed more than 100 Israeli planes shot down Thursday, and a Tel Aviv communique said Israel bagged a total of 11 Arab planes. Pentagon observers believe both sides have exaggerated their aerial kill reports.

—Egypt's Middle East News Agency, in a report immediately described by the U.S. State Department as an "outrageous lie," said Western diplomatic sources in Cairo claimed that U.S. carrier-based warplanes had attacked Egyptian positions.

Unions merge

The memberships of the University of Iowa Employees Association (UIEA) and the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Local 12, by an overwhelming majority voted to merge Thursday night.

The new union will be named the University of Iowa Employees Union, Local 12, and will be affiliated with AFSCME, an AFL-CIO affiliate. The new local union will initially represent more than 800 University of Iowa employees, making it the largest AFSCME local in Iowa.

Peter Benner and Harold Goering, local union leaders, agreed that "this represents a major step in the fight UI employees are having with the Board of Regents for collective bargaining rights."

"We are confident that the expected growth and power of the merged local will mean decent wages and working conditions."

Turkey

NEW YORK (AP) — Consumers got more bad news on Thursday. Food experts said dairy and bread prices would keep going up in coming months and predicted that this year's Thanksgiving turkey will cost twice as much as last year's.

The news came at a briefing sponsored by the Super Market Institute, a nonprofit trade association.

All of the experts blamed government controls, export policies and rising feed and grain prices for the hikes at the retail levels. None offered much hope of any change in the immediate future.

Watergate

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal grand jury Thursday indicted former White House plumbers' boss Egil Krogh Jr. on charges he lied about the activities of two Watergate conspirators linked to the Ellsberg break-in.

Krogh, already under indictment in California on Ellsberg burglary charges, is alleged in a two-count indictment of making false statements on Aug. 28, 1972 to a federal grand jury investigating the Watergate break-in.

The indictment was the first returned by a new grand jury empaneled Aug. 13 at the request of special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

The maximum penalty on each count is five years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Clark

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, Thursday said he has mixed reactions to testimony presented during Senate subcommittee hearings on proposed new federal nursing home regulations.

Clark said he was pleased to learn the Health, Education and Welfare Department was planning to make two major revisions in the regulations, but said regulations are still too weak to be meaningful in many cases.

Barf, The Daily Iowan weather slob, announced yesterday that he would join in the suit against the UI parietal rule.

"I know it may take a lot of time and money to win this fight," Barf said in an exclusive interview, "but I figure it will be easier than trying to clean up my dorm room!"

Although skies will be clearing, temperatures will be going to the dogs with highs in the 50s.

Nixon pick for new vice president may face opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — The threat of a bitter congressional fight over and possible rejection of John Connally illustrates the problem President Nixon faces in nominating a new vice president.

Nixon's criteria are a person who is qualified to be President, someone who shares his foreign policy views and a nominee who can win the approval of the Democratic-controlled House and Senate.

Leading Democrats are firmly opposed to Connally and some Republicans warn that his selection would split both parties and precipitate a bitter and protracted struggle.

Asked Thursday if he thought

Republicans would make this clear in submitting their three recommendations — both positive and negative — to the President, one GOP senator said: "If he doesn't know it by now, then it's hopeless."

At the White House, Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon "wants to move as expeditiously and rapidly as possible" in sending the name of his choice as Agnew's successor to Congress. Ziegler said the President has made clear he wants the "direct views" of congressional and Republican leaders, governors and GOP state chairmen.

Basically, Nixon appears to have three choices:

—Selection of one of the major figures in the GOP giving one of the party's presidential hopefuls a leg up on the 1976 nomination. Besides Connolly, this list is headed by New York Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, who has passed the word he has an "active interest," and California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

—Selection of a respected senior statesman, a person of impeccable credentials with a less partisan tinge, in a bid to restore national unity. Former Secretary of State William P. Rogers appears to head this list, along with retired Sens. John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky and John J. Williams of Delaware; Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona, and the two top GOP congressional leaders, Sen. Hugh Scott and Rep. Gerald R. Ford.

—A dark-horse, a younger less mentioned figure, in the way that Spiro T. Agnew was selected by Nixon in 1968.

Rules of Conduct relaxed

Regents rescind part of rules

By The Daily Iowan Staff

The Board of Regents Thursday abolished the requirement that students or staff members be suspended for a minimum of one year if found guilty of serious acts of misconduct.

The 5 to 4 regents vote rescinds a portion of the Regents Rules of Personal Conduct which were adopted in 1970 during a period of nationwide and local campus rioting.

The rules subject students, faculty and staff to disciplinary proceedings and sanctions up to and including suspension, expulsion or dismissal, with a minimum sanction of one year suspension for "serious" misconduct if found guilty of acts such as:

—Obstruction or disruption of teaching, research, administration, disciplinary procedures.

—Unauthorized occupation or use or unauthorized entry into any university facility.

—Setting fire on campus without proper authority.

UI Pres. Willard Boyd told the regents meeting in Council Bluffs that UI students, faculty and staff were unanimous in objecting to the minimum sanction.

David Vernon, special assistant to the president, who presented the UI case against minimum sanctions to the regents, said, "When the regents rules were adopted...the internal conditions at the universities were in a very uncertain state."

No case

He and other UI officials added that in the three years the regents uniform rules of personal conduct have been in effect, no single case has been tried under the "serious" section of these rules.

However, Vernon said one year suspensions have been handed out under other sections. UI officials objected to the sanctions as not permitting discretion as to motivation of the student involved or his attitude after the involvement.

In approving the change, regents stipulated that the president of each of the three state universities must determine the sanctions for misconduct personally and should not delegate those sanctions.

UI now has established hearing procedures for regents rules violations, but it did not three years ago when the rules were adopted because former student body president Phil Dantes had pulled all students off UI committees, including the judicial committee.

This, along with unstable campus conditions, gave rise to the implementation of regents rules and mandatory sanctions. Vernon noted at the meeting: "The students at Iowa had pulled out of the system and the regents wanted to be sure if there were serious violations there would be at least minimum sanctions."

In opposing the mandatory sanctions, Vernon said each of the three state universities now has an operating judicial system with the school presidents having final say on penalties.

The presidents of the University of Northern Iowa and Iowa State University endorsed the UI position against mandatory sanctions during the regents meeting.

However, regents President Mary Petersen and regent Ray Bailey of Clarion opposed the move to relax their rules.

Breakdown

Petersen said current judicial machinery on campuses may be working today, but could break down if emotions again took over.

Bailey added, "Our problems have been caused by a few individuals on campus and not the serious student," and said serious students shouldn't object to the minimum sanction.

Regents voting against the change were Bailey, Petersen, and S.J. Brownlee of Emmetsburg.

Regents did not approve another request made by UI Student Senate President Craig Karsen, A3, to remove sanctions for off campus student misconduct.

But the board asked its staff to work on current language of that rule to make it clear that off-campus conduct would only be considered by the university when it seriously interfered with the function of the university.

Plaintiffs in parietal rule suit just 'want to help get rid of it'

By MAUREEN CONNORS
Staff Writer

A University of Iowa student who two weeks ago asked the Student Legal Services how he could get out of his dorm contract is now one of seven students bringing a parietal rule suit against UI Pres. Willard Boyd and the nine Board of Regents members.

"I don't feel like I'm suing Pres. Boyd or the regents, I'm just trying to get out of a contract I was forced into," said Mark Holden, A1.

At Thursday's Board of Regents meeting in Council Bluffs each regent and Boyd received a summons to a class action suit to rescind the parietal rule.

The other four plaintiffs are Jeffery Buck, A1; Kevin Montgomery, A1; Pam Christian, A1; and Cindy Hill, A2.

The plaintiffs' criticism of the parietal rule is that it denies students certain constitutional rights and violates the state law of Iowa by coercing students to sign contracts.

The suit states the parietal rule violates the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution by denying students the right to equal protection, the first nine amendments by denying privacy, and the First and 14th Amendments by denying students the right to freedom of association.

The suit contends that all or some of the plaintiffs now pay more for living in the dormitories than they would pay if they lived off campus.

The court is asked by the plaintiffs to issue a permanent injunction against the regents enforcing them from enforcing the rule and to enter judgement that the contracts obtained as a result of the rule are unenforceable and rescindable.

Class action

The seven UI students are representatives in the class action suit making their case pertain to all students in similar situations.

The action to eliminate the parietal rule comes after the UI Student Senate unanimously agreed Sept. 11 to support a class action suit against the parietal rule. That decision was reached after a senate task force concluded a legal challenge could be viable.

"I'm representative of students by the mere fact that I'm sure there are other people who want out of the dorm life," Holden said.

Jennifer Janssen, A2, wanted to live in an apartment this year. When she heard from a friend about the parietal rule she became involved in the suit.

As with the other representatives in the class action suit, Janssen said she disagrees with the parietal rule that requires freshmen and sophomores to live in the dormitories.

"The dorm is okay for some people, but I'm getting tired of it," Janssen said.

Cecilia Hagerty, A1, said her interest in the parietal rule is a combination of "disagreement with the parietal rule and wanting to help get rid of it."

Regent Petersen

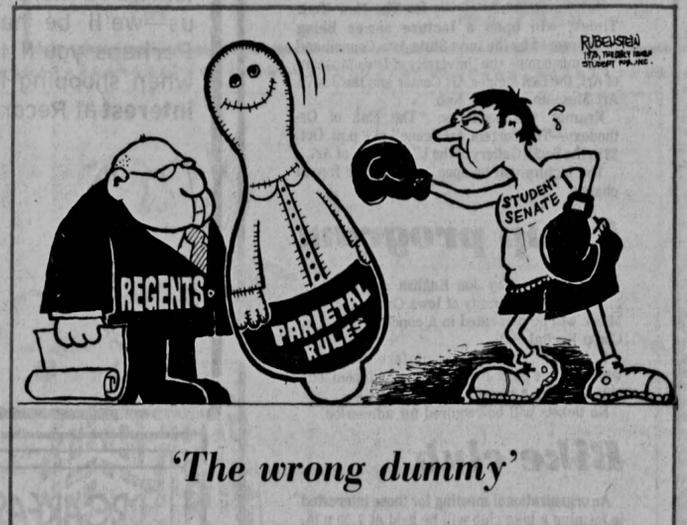

Speaking about the parietal rule, Board of Regents Pres. Mary Petersen said she feels there is a certain "educational value in dormitory living which students can't get any place else.

"The validity of boards around the states have been ruled in different ways, but I feel we are on safe grounds," Petersen said. "We wouldn't have passed the rule if it were otherwise."

Marc Harding, a graduate of the UI Law School and lawyer for the case, said the most valid argument going for the plaintiffs is "the U.S. Constitution."

According to a researcher for the case, a hearing could be held in late winter or early spring at the earliest.

Federal Judge William C. Stuart has been assigned the case. It will be heard in the Southern District Court of Iowa in Des Moines.

'The wrong dummy'

Business booms for 'research reports'

BY CHUCK HICKMAN
and RON LANGSTON

Business is booming for an Iowa City firm supplying "research reports" to University of Iowa students, and college administrators indicate they do not currently plan to interfere with the operation of the enterprise.

National Research Inc. (NRI)—the organization supplying "research reports"—appeared on the UI campus this fall, and recently blanketed classrooms with flyers advertising its services. Though company officials have refused to discuss its operation with local media, information obtained by The Daily Iowan reveals that success of the firm is not being drastically harmed by statements of UI administrators who voiced disapproval of the scheme.

Students who turn in term papers written by others will be subject to sanctions by the university according to UI officials. Such penalties can include disciplinary action by the instructor in terms of a failing grade, or by the dean of the college, who may place the offender on suspension, extend graduation requirements, or expel a student from the UI.

NRI has stressed that its product is a "research report," which the student is responsible for after it has been sold. No official opposition or university regulations prohibit the use of such background material in the completion of term papers. The finished product does include footnotes and a bibliography, however an NRI official does not make clear whether the reports need additional preparation before submission as an academic project.

The reports are written by researchers who are "very well qualified" according to the NRI worker. Any person employed by the university would also face action by UI if found writing the reports, but the UI was only told the researchers work "late at night."

The service says it will write reports on almost any subject for a student, and has had few complaints from customers who have purchased these items. Rates range from $14 for one to three pages; $23 for four to six pages; $35 dollars for seven to 10 pages and $55 for 11 to 15 pages.

One-half the fee must be paid at the time a paper is ordered, with the balance submitted upon receipt of the report.

No guarantee of a high grade is given by the firm because students may alter the "research report" after it is obtained from NRI. Few complaints of low grades have been received, the NCI worker said.

"Business has been cut down some by the university's complaints, but we've had plenty of business," he said.

UI officials are taking an attitude of wait and see towards the firm's operations, hinting they will act only if many "plagiarized" works are detected or if large numbers of students begin to use the service. Weapons against its operation seem to be few at the present time, leaving individual instructors with the role of resisting any trend towards the use of purchased reports.

While many UI professors differ as to how they would handle such a situation, most agree it is extremely difficult to detect and prove the use of such aids.

Irving Kovarsky, professor of business administration, suggested he would give a student an incomplete for submitting a purchased paper, and would then require a more difficult assignment as a make-up. He indicated that research and writing experience are essential to education, and no useful purpose is served by ignoring such needs.

While not opposed to the use of "research reports," Justin Green, assistant professor of political science, said a university-wide policy should be established on the use of the material. He added that any paper with such supplements should be clearly marked, thus giving the professor needed basis to grade the effort.

Green also suggested term papers often do not meet the educational purpose intended by the instructor, and could be replaced in some instances by giving students an option between writing a paper or taking a test.

Crisis Center included

Crime Commission cuts off funds

By CHUCK HAWKINS
Staff Writer

The Iowa City Crisis Center will receive no Iowa Crime Commission funds after January 1, 1974, it was announced at the Johnson County Regional Planning Commission Justice and Human Relations Committee meeting Wednesday night.

Also announced was a complete cutoff of crime commission funds for the Iowa City H.O.P.E. House.

Both groups had received funds for fiscal year 1972 from the Crime Commission; H.O.P.E. House $15,800 and Crisis Center $13,729. Requests for additional funding for fiscal year 1973 for the groups have been rejected by the Crime Commission.

An appeal was made at the State Crime Commission meeting in Des Moines on October 5 by representatives of the Regional Planning Commission to reinstate already denied funding for the programs.

The Crime Commission did however agree to give the Crisis Center $4,000 to be used for the remainder of 1973.

George Davis, chairman of the Justice and Human Relations Committee, said the committee had been considering litigation to force the Crime Commission to release funds for these and other local programs that had not been approved.

But the committee decided Wednesday not to initiate any court action, but rather to try and work closer with the state Crime Commission in order to eliminate any future conflicts over funding.

The acting director of Crisis Center, Paula Dudrow, said the center won't be going out of existence because of the cut in funding, but services may have to be curtailed.

Dudrow said a meeting of the Crisis Center board will be held October 23 to decide what actions will be taken.

Presently Crisis Center has two paid staff members and approximately 90 volunteer workers.

Dudrow said one option open to the board would be to try and find free office facilities somewhere. The Crisis Center is presently located at 608 S. Dubuque.

The director of H.O.P.E. House was also optimistic about the future.

Director Sam Hunt said, "All intentions at this time are of not closing our doors."

Hunt said he was very displeased with the decision to cut off funding and said the Crime Commission "obviously didn't take the last 11 months into consideration."

During those 11 months, Hunt said, 53 residents have lived at the H.O.P.E. House and 80 persons have used the services there.

Hunt blamed a lobbying effort by the state Bureau of Adult Corrections for the Crime Commission's cut of H.O.P.E.'s funding. He said the bureau "didn't like the idea" of having no control over H.O.P.E.

"H.O.P.E. House is a center to provide a new beginning for former prisoners who have a sincere desire to remain free of the criminal justice system," Hunt said.

Hunt said at the moment residents of H.O.P.E. House are paying four dollars a day each to cover the costs of rent, food and utilities. This doesn't leave enough money to pay for any staff or outside counseling though, Hunt said.

He said local businesses would be contacted about donating money to pay for these services.

Also turned down by the Crime Commission was a research project to study rape.

The local committee had applied for a $2,500 grant to use staff people or perhaps social scientists of the University of Iowa to study rape, Davis said.

But the Crime Commission wanted an action program rather than research, Davis said. What type of action program, Davis wasn't sure.

The fund cut is the result of differing priorities between the local committee and the Iowa State Crime Commission on the use of the anti-crime funds. The emphasis of the local committee has been in the areas of prevention and experimentation while the state board prefers tangible actions such as strengthening of police forces.

Justice Department asked to review ITT case

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department has been asked to review a House panel's hearing record to see if there was perjury or obstruction of justice in a case involving International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. papers.

Aides said the House Commerce Committee's special investigations subcommittee decided Wednesday to refer "to the Department of Justice the record of (the panel's) inquiry into the withholding and transfer of Securities and Exchange Commission files pertaining to ITT."

The subcommittee advised Atty. Gen. Elliot Richardson that it "does not wish to constrain or limit the department's review of this matter in any way. Nor would we wish to charge, in advance of the review, that violations have actually taken place."

The case centers on a batch of ITT papers that the SEC sent to the Justice Department instead of making them available to the subcommittee. Former SEC Chairman William Casey, denying wrongdoing, testified he consulted with then-White House counsel John W. Dean III before making the transfer of the papers to the Justice Department.

The papers, that one SEC official termed "politically sensitive," were eventually made public by a Senate subcommittee. The papers dealt with alleged ITT contacts with top Nixon administration officials in the firm's successful drive to settle an antitrust case.

In settling the dispute with the Justice Department, eventual agreement let ITT keep Hartford Fire Insurance Co. in exchange for other divestitures in 1971.

Station would serve city

FM permit issued pending action

By BOB SUTTON
Staff Writer

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) has granted a conditional construction permit to Communicators, Inc. to build a 3,000 watt FM radio station in Iowa City. This is the most recent action in a 4½ year dispute over filling the still-vacant FM channel slot allotted to Iowa City.

The conditional permit was granted pending the final outcome of a petition to reconsider the FCC's order to build two 3,000 watt stations in Iowa City and Anamosa, Iowa, rather than one 100,000 watt station in Iowa City.

The final outcome of the Communicators, Inc. appeal could be a landmark decision which will affect hundreds of thousands of people in eastern Iowa, and would influence all future FM station allocations nationwide. It may also encourage challenges to existing FM stations, according to the attorneys for Communicators, Inc., if the present guidelines are retained.

Communicators, Inc. financed a comparative study of the service the competing proposals would provide citizens of Iowa City and the surrounding communities.

According to the study, the large, 100,000 watt station in Iowa City would provide service to almost 300,000 persons. With two small, 3,000 watt stations located in Iowa City and Anamosa, service to the largest population would reach only 200,000 persons.

While the large Iowa City station would provide "first service" (service to people who can receive no other FM station of the given signal strength) to almost 28,000 persons, the two stations together would provide first service to no one. This is an important consideration. If the two small stations were located to provide maximum first service coverage, they could still reach only 471 persons.

In addition, their total coverage would be reduced to approximately 100,000 people, or one-third the number that could be served by one large station in Iowa City.

This raises the question of which proposal constitutes "greater good" and what best serves the public interest. When ascertaining the greater good, a factor to consider is the comparative populations of Iowa City and Anamosa. Iowa City's population has increased by 13,000, or 40 per cent, from 1960 to 1970. In the same decade, Anamosa's population decreased by 5 per cent.

Will service to as many as possible be traded off for what some consider a lower priority—local organization of programming? This is the kind of issue at stake in the decision the FCC will eventually render in the Communicators, Inc. appeal.

Eliot Keller, executive officer and stockholder in Communicators, Inc., said construction of the new station will probably be delayed until early next spring.

Keller expects programming to begin two to three months after the construction begins. He described the station's proposed format as "contemporary; somewhere between Top 40 and progressive. We won't have a rigid playlist, and there will be some album cuts."

He said that he is optimistic that the FCC will reverse its decision and once more restore a class C station to Iowa City. Communicators, Inc. has been awaiting a ruling since June 12, 1972.

Keller said if the FCC reverses itself again and allows the larger, 100,000 watt FM station to be built in Iowa City, construction would begin as soon as possible.

Although it would mean finding a new site and losing the investment made to construct the smaller facility, Keller said, "It was, and still is, our original intention to build an FM station to serve Iowa City. That's the sole reason for the formation of our corporation. If all we're allowed to build is the 3,000 watt station, we will, but we're hoping to get the 100,000 watt station back to Iowa City."

The problem which resulted in the appeal began when Vivid Music Enterprises of Washington, Iowa, petitioned the FCC in late November 1969 to amend their allotment of two commercial, 100,000 watt FM stations to Iowa City.

Vivid wanted to reduce the vacant class C channel in Iowa City to a class A channel (3,000 watts) and to build another class A station in Anamosa, which has no local AM, FM or TV facilities.

When Vivid failed to respond within the prescribed time to file comments with the FCC, their proposal was disallowed on procedural grounds. Vivid then petitioned for reconsideration on the grounds that its executive, Roy Hodges, was not aware that it was necessary to re-file his original petition a second time.

Despite Communicators, Inc.'s objections that procedural rules were being disregarded, the commission decided it was in the public interest to reconsider, and issued a Third Report and Order on May 12, 1972.

This report is unique. Usually, such reports are one or two pages long, at most. This report is six pages in length. It also contains apparent ambiguities. For instance, a petition was filed by Big Country Broadcasting Corp. on June 16, 1971, to re-assign the class C channel (100,000 watts) from Iowa City to Burlington, Iowa.

This petition was made too late to have any official bearing in the Communicators, Inc.-Vivid Music Enterprises dispute, but it was taken into consideration anyway.

The commission itself acknowledged in a curious footnote, that the petition "...is not properly before us for resolution in this proceeding in light of the cut-off procedure announced...We must, however, take judicial notice of its pendency."

Keller said, "It seems the FCC is saying that we can't take the Burlington proposal into account, but they're going to take it into account."

Attorneys for Communicators, Inc. contend that the decision as stated in the Third Report and Order "stands as a landmark—if not the leading—commission decision in the area of FM channel allocation."

In their Third Report and Order, the FCC said "Our major concern, we must point out, is in the development and/or retention of local service, in this proceeding."

Communicators, Inc. replies that this departure from the aforementioned order of priorities by the commission "appears to be abandoning the standards for allocation of FM services carefully followed for the past 10 years."

Agnew issue raises doubts

Some things about the Agnew resignation just don't seem right. It obviously will take a sustained period of soul-searching to feel the total gravity of the situation, but some aspects of the incident come right to mind as unacceptable.

At least three distinct individuals or groups can be singled out as not reacting in quite a "kosher" manner.

Former Vice-president Agnew obviously deserves some spear-throwing for his actions and statements of Wednesday and previous times:

—No one in his right mind could condone what Agnew was found guilty of doing. At a time when corruption in government strikes close to crippling our very process of justice, Agnew adds fuel to the fire with a de-facto admission of guilt. It may be an easily accepted fact that officials on all levels of government make "deals" to help themselves politically. This is in itself the very heart of the Agnew case. But his continued acceptance of the money until December of last year leads us to another point.

—At the very point in time that Agnew was scorching the press for harboring criminals for their use of "confidential sources", he was still accepting payments on the sly from contractors in Maryland. He was continually doubting the credibility of the press, and assuming a stature of unquestionable honesty. How could he look those people in the face and say what he did? Amazing!

—Agnew's statements reflecting his continued innocence, in light of the apparent evidence against him, makes one believe that the man is playing with less than a full deck. The real clincher was his statement that although he was innocent, he was pleading "no contest" and resigning his post. He said that this action was best for the country because his lengthy trial would distract the nation from the important issues of our time. The very heart of our country's government is set up to protect individuals' rights to the maximum. Although some questions have been raised on the ability of our present court system to guarantee these rights, no citizen would give up the rights that Agnew has sacrificed to avoid "distracting the American public." No one would expect him to. If Spiro Agnew really believes that he is innocent of the charges against him, every citizen would support his fight to retain not only his rights but his respectability. It confirms one's doubt that Agnew is innocent.

The Congress of the United States has suggested that whoever fills Agnew's vacancy should be prohibited from seeking the Presidency in 1976. Not only is there no precedent for this type of action, there is no logical reason for it. Any man qualified to fill the position of vice president at this time must be able to serve as President at a moment's notice. So why should the President be forced to select a man who is so neutral that he appears to resemble a dead fish?

President Nixon reportedly approved, or suggested the possibility of plea bargaining in the Agnew case. At a time when our President can hardly stand more criticism, he admits to taking part in what probably bothers Americans the most about the whole mess.

The entire truth will probably not be known until everyone involved in the scandal is "taken care of." But it must be kept above board from now on in order to begin the long (and increasingly lengthening) road back to trust in government.

...and a rally

Tomorrow there will be a rally on the Pentacrest in support of the United Farm Workers drive for fair labor practices in the lettuce industry. The issue is years old and support of the movement has been expressed here many times.

But one word of advice to those who have time tomorrow to attend the event. If you don't know how you stand on the issue, go and hear the rationale behind it. If you already have your mind made up, attend to find out how to help move the issue off the editorial pages and onto the news pages.

Misquoted women

To the Editor:

Well, it's happened again. Once more someone's attempt to do something constructive in this community has been hampered by careless misquoting in the press. We refer to the article in the Thursday October 4 DI about the rap sessions that are being held on Monday night in the Women's Center; specifically, the statement in the third column in direct quotes that, "The Women's Center is no bra-burning, Lesbian center. People here are human."

Nor this little gem, which was not said by any of the four people involved in the interview, seems to have done a great deal to reinforce the very prejudices and resentments that we are trying to dispel. Oh, we bet the readers of that article had all kinds of fun drawing conclusions about the Women's Center. Like Maybe: 1) There are no Lesbians there (they hide in holes and only come out in the dark of the moon); 2) There are only Lesbians there (waiting to leap snarling and panting upon the unwary); 3) Lesbians are not people (they're pre-verts!); and/or 4) Lesbians are not human (they have fangs and claws and are covered with fur). We are very distressed and very angry, sisters, and it's all the worse because one of us is gay. So we would like to state here what we actually said and what the purpose of these rap sessions is, as we see it.

We feel that there should be some special time and place for women to get together to talk and find out about each other and to share problems and hopes and to get support in the struggle that we all share by being women in this society. One of us will be at the Women's Center each Monday night to talk to any and all women who want to come in. We are aware that there are hostile people around who are reinforcing the myth that the Women's Center is full of "pre-verts" and we are going to do everything we can to get rid of this divisive and destructive idea. We are sick and tired of being defined in terms of whom we choose to go to bed with or what we choose to do in bed. We are all women, and we care very much about our sisters, and this is our way of trying to do something to help the movement along. We would also like to say that we personally have found a great deal of warmth, caring and support from women we have met at the Women's Center, gay and straight alike, and these women are deeply concerned about and dedicated to the welfare of their sisters.

Come in and talk to us, sisters. You're all welcome.

UFW rally

To the Editor:
This up coming Friday, October 12th from 12:20 til 1:30 on the lawn of the Pentacrest, the United Farmworker Support Committee of the University of Iowa will hold an United Farmworkers Solidarity Rally.

The purpose of this rally is to explain to the students and community of Iowa City the reasons behind the UFW Boycott on lettuce and grapes. The rally will feature prominent speakers of the Boycott movement. The scheduled speakers are as follows: Marco Munoz, (Midwest Co-ordinator, Chicago) Helen Duffy (Chicago, Iowa City) and Nancy Hillmer (Moline). Also to be presented by "El Teatro Zapatista" are songs and acts.

The Boycott issue is a concern for everyone who eats the fruits and vegetables of migrant labor, which in reality makes every individual involved some way or another in the Boycott movement. Whether you wish to boycott or not is up to you.

Through a plea of concern for fellow man, the UFW Support Committee asks you to be informed. Even if you leave the rally against the boycott at least you will know what the condition of the farmworkers is and why there is a boycott. So for humanities sake make an all-out effort to attend the United Farmworkers Solidarity Rally, Friday, October 12th, 12:20-1:30 on the lawn of the Pentacrest. Thank you.

Marijuana reform measure

Editor's Note: Today's Equal Time column is a contribution of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML).

A civil suit challenging the constitutionality of the nation's marijuana laws was filed today in Federal Court in Washington, D.C.

Brought by the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws (NORML), a Washington based non-profit public interest group, the suit will be argued by former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, a member of NORML's Advisory Board.

The court is being asked by NORML's suit to declare that laws prohibiting the private possession and use of marijuana violate an individual's right of privacy and other express guarantees of the U.S. Constitution.

Additionally named as plaintiff in the suit is a class of persons consisting of all present adult users of marijuana in the District of Columbia, estimated in the complaint to number 40,000 persons.

Speaking at a press conference this morning, Mr. Clark stated that "The country's marijuana laws constitute an unwarranted intrusion into the private lives of millions of Americans. The continued criminal prohibition of the private use of marijuana serves no useful purpose while causing irreparable harm to the lives and careers of the approximately 250 thousand young people who are arrested each year in this country. As a nation we should discourage the use of marijuana as we should the use of all recreational drugs, including alcohol and tobacco.

According to the suit, 26 million Americans have now tried marijuana and 13 million are regular users. The complaint cites the findings and recommendations of the report of the National Commission of Marijuana and Drug Abuse (Shafer Commission), and relies on recent U.S. Supreme Court decisions concerning abortion, birth control, and the private possession of pornographic materials, all of which reaffirm the individual's basic right of privacy.

Keith Stroup, Director of NORML, noted that the weight of modern scientific evidence, including the just released annual report of the National Institute of Mental Health, continues to confirm that marijuana is a "relatively harmless" substance. "While no drug—including aspirin and other over-the-counter preparations—is totally without harm," Stroup commented, "marijuana is a mild, relatively harmless drug as used by the overwhelming majority of persons. Its use has demonstrated no effects significantly harmful to the individual or to society."

"The District of Columbia was chosen as the jurisdiction in which to file this suit," Stroup pointed out, "because there has been an alarming increase in marijuana arrests since 1970, and this has been happening at a time when an increasing number of respected and responsible organizations and individuals have called for removing the criminal sanctions for the private possession of marijuana, including the Mayor's own advisory commission."

Figures cited in the complaint show that there were 275 marijuana arrests in the District of Columbia in 1970, 694 in 1971, 1667 in 1972, and 1306 for the first half of 1973. Nationally, there were an estimated 226,000 marijuana arrests in 1971 and 296,000 in 1972.

Organizations named in the suit as recommending marijuana decriminalization include President Nixon's National Commission on Marijuana and Drug Abuse, the American Bar Association, the District of Columbia Mayor's Advisory Committee on Narcotics Addiction, the American Public Health Association, Consumers Union, the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Law, the National Council of Churches, and the National Education Association.

The case will be heard before a special three-judge Federal court with a right of appeal directly to the United States Supreme Court.

Named as defendants in the suit were Washington, D.C. Police Chief Jerome Wilson, D.C. Mayor Walter Washington, Attorney General Elliott Richardson, and John R. Bartels, Jr., Administrator of the Justice Department's Drug Enforcement Administration.

In addition to Mr. Clark, the attorneys for NORML include Peter H. Meyers, Jonathan S. Bowers, and Herman Bluestein of Washington, D.C. and David Rosenfeld of Alexandria, Virginia. Professor Eric S. Sirulnik of the George Washington University Law School is also assisting.

Impeachment: what is it?

Article II, Section 4: The President, Vice-President and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

Article I, Section 2: The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Article I, Section 3: The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments...judgement in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than the removal from office, and disqualification to hold any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, and judgement and punishment according to law.

"Impeachment to the average American has become regarded as an unsuccessful attempt to remove Andrew Johnson from the Presidency."

From its inception in 1836, impeachment was essentially a political (factional) weapon, i.e. impeachment is a proceeding purely of a political nature. "It was designed to protect the state against gross official misdemeanors."

In Great Britain, the Parliament used impeachment as a means to replace ministers and other such powerful offenders to the Crown. In short, impeachment made officials chosen by the King accountable to Parliament rather than to the Crown.

Theoretically an impeachment proceeding is not to abuse an individual, nor his property, but simply divests him of his political capacity, i.e. it disqualifies him to hold office.

During the seventeenth century "the great period when Parliament struggled to curb ministers who were the tools of royal oppression, impeachment had its hey-day. The misuse and physical abuse of individuals rights and liberties became the norm. The use of legislative power to remove officials also became an accepted practice among lords. In this sense "legislative power" meant "Bill of Attainder."

The Bill of Attainder became popular because it was a quick process of removal i.e. it was more convenient than impeachment because it superseded the necessity of a trial. Political expediency and lust for power and control transformed impeachment from a tool which would protect the state, to a mechanism for political persecution.

Impeachment in America has its roots in the English common law. However, the framers of the American constitution were astute in the area of parliamentary law and its employment in impeachment. Theoretically both systems hold impeachment in the same context, but there does exist some pointed differences between the two. It is in their application that the two systems differ in their early history.

Parliament in the early days of impeachment held impeachment in a criminal setting, i.e. conviction could be followed by death, imprisonment or a heavy fine. In short, impeachment in Great Britain evolved into a proceeding where criminal punishment and removal from office all occurred in one proceeding. Impeachment in America is not a criminal proceeding as in Great Britain.

It is important to note that impeachment does not mean a crime has been committed nor that the individual being impeached is a criminal. The word crime often labels people into a stigma that ruins and dampens one's life style forever. Society plays a great role in the distinction of a crime or what is criminal. People do not understand that the distinction of crime and criminal acts, the violation of law and the moral violations have different effects and outcomes upon individuals and society as a whole. There is great distinction being made today between what is deviant behavior and what is a violation of the law. This, I think, can be paralleled with what is high crimes and high misdemeanors and what is mis-conduct in office? Impeachment was to be grounded on high criminality. "Maladministration" is not enough for a constitutional basis for impeachment.

The constitutional interpretation of impeachment refers to impeachment "as a kind of inquest into the conduct of an officer merely as it regards his office: the manner in which he performs the duties thereof; and the effects that his conduct therein may have on society. Contrary to early English impeachments, impeachment here in the U.S. is more in the nature of a civil investigation rather than that of a criminal prosecution.

Rich receive welfare, too

The Daily Iowan News Services

The commonly held view that through welfare payments our liberal federal government functions like Robin Hood to help the poor is wrong, according to the new director of the School of Social Work at the University of Iowa.

The government is more of a Robin Hood for the rich, says Thomas H. Walz, professor of social work.

The federal government spends its tax dollars in such a way that "those people who need public aid the most are likely to get the least, and those who need it least are likely to get the most."

Walz says that "any transfer of public tax dollars from the public treasury to someone's hands" should be called welfare. All federal expenditures and even tax incentives are forms of welfare, in his view.

"To say that everybody is 'on welfare' is merely to recognize that we are all inter-dependent," he says. "Nearly everyone benefits from government spending in some way just as nearly everyone pays for these benefits to some degree."

But the poor benefit much less and receive very little of the tax dollar, he says.

"Vast sums of tax money are paid out to other income groups, but since these payments are hidden under the cloak of subsidies, or couched in the vague language of bureaucracy, they are considered legitimate. Many of these benefits do not even show up on the federal budget because they are given in the form of tax credits."

"Why," Walz asks, "is an $8 billion federal government contribution to Home Mortgage Insurance in 1972, nearly all of which went to help middle- and upper-income people to buy houses, considered legitimate aid, while the $589 million spent on Model Cities programs last year is regarded as a welfare boondoggle?"

Categorical assistance programs for poor people involve only $20 billion and 15 million poor people out of a federal budget of $250 billion, he notes.

"My main thesis is not that the poor are only getting crumbs; it is that compared to these crumbs, the middle- and upper-income groups are being treated to a rich feast."

Speaking recently to high school students, Walz characterized the present situation as "an upside-down welfare state." Features of this state include:

—The poor are in a minority for the first time in any society in history.

—The institutions have been created by a powerful white, non-poor majority to serve their own self-interests.

—Two welfare structures operate, with one serving the poor and one serving the non-poor.

Walz thinks that many affluent Americans believe in the "fiction that only the poor get something for nothing from the welfare state." This view is re-enforced by the way aid is dispensed to the non-poor, he contends.

"The way each particular sub-system of the welfare state processes the varieties of aid to different groups is critical. Subsidies to the rich are processed in negative (i.e. invisible) form through tax incentives. Grants to the Aid to Families with Dependent Children recipient are handed out through an often dehumanizing public bureaucracy where eligibility is determined through a demeaning investigation.

"Whereas the latter grants are processed through a punishment-centered bureaucracy, the former are offered as rewards to the successful. When the head of a large corporation asks for government aid, he need not fear investigation. If the government sends anybody, it will likely be an expert economist who will try to help this deserving businessman solve his problem."

Walz cites depreciation allowances, special capital gains status and the tax-free status of income from state and local bonds as all generous forms of tax "welfare" for the wealthy.

A new generation of social critics have been calling attention to the paradox of so much "welfare" for the wealthy, Walz says. He recommends a look at the Federal Outlays Manual published by the U.S. Government Printing Office to document his charges that "most of the recipients of public welfare are middle- and upper-income groups."

Walz tells students to look at all the expenditures of government—for highways, guaranteed loans, education, defense or whatever—and decide which category of human beings is being served.

Walz is the author of "The Upside Down Welfare State." He

Musicians to play for Fort Madison prisoners

By SUZAN ZOLLO
Feature Writer

Over the last two months a group of seven men and three women have been rehearsing a highly original concert of jazz, blues, rock, soul and gospel music which they are going to perform this weekend at the C.O.D. Steam Laundry and at the Men's Federal Reformatory at Fort Madison, Iowa.

OO Moja—the name which these musicians have given to their concert—is an African term which states that we are all one and must help each other. And, to the extent that these people have made a commitment of their time, energy and personal expense for the specific purpose of bringing their music into prisons and reformatories, the name is appropriate to the spirit of this concert.

The musicians that have come together to compose, arrange and perform their music are personalities of considerable stature with much experience in both recording and stage performances. From Chicago there is Marvin Sims, vocalist and Mercury recording artist; from Indianapolis David Atkinson, vocalist and harp player formerly with the Segal-Schwal Blue Band; and from L.A. Steve Hillstrom, a guitarist who played with Harlequin. From Iowa City there will be vocalists Jeanne Jordan, Leslie Evans and Coralie Kleinhesselink making their first appearances; Jim Berger a bass player formerly with Combinations; Bill Goebel on keyboards, acoustic guitar and vocals and Joe Eberline on percussions, also formerly with Harlequin.

Joe Eberline was initially contacted by John Price of the Penal Digest Int., in conjunction with the Church of the New Song, a group of prisoners and ex-prisoners who are working together to improve penal conditions around the country. The idea this time was not simply to raise money for the magazine but to gain access to the reformatories and put on shows within the confines of the prisons themselves.

Despite the knowledge that a venture such as this is without any financial reward and in fact requires assuming financial responsibility themselves, Eberline said that all the people he contacted were enthusiastic to the point of cancelling previous engagements to get the concert together.

About 60 per cent of the material to be performed is original and was composed basically by Sims, Goebel and Hillstrom with their audiences in mind. Eberline describes the music as "blues and rhythm & blues oriented." He goes on to say that he feels "all concerned have a real expression of the blues that we hope is felt and understood by the audience we're playing for." For the most part, the group will use the same format at the C.O.D. on Saturday as they will the following day at Fort Madison. They will open their concert with a two-person blues piece—piano and harp—and then will move on to a lot of original songs as well as numbers by Freddy King and Stevie Wonder. The show winds up with all ten musicians and vocalists on stage bringing their music together and "exhibiting excellent five and six part harmonies."

On Sunday there will be a crew from KDIN-TV on standby to film the OO Moja concert at Fort Madison, and the resulting footage will ostensibly be incorporated into a series of programs for educational TV entitled "Behind Prison Walls."

The purpose of the exposure, according to Eberline, is essentially to point out to prison officials and directors around the country the extent to which this kind of entertainment is a good thing and a positive experience for all those concerned. "Our hope is that this show will provide proof enough from the response within, that the prisoners want and need the kind of entertainment we can provide. And even if we're unable to perform any more shows after Ft. Madison, we would hope that a precedent of sorts had been set via our concert."

The uncertainties which Eberline refers to in his comments may have something to do with the following factors. First of all he emphasizes that OO Moja is the name of the concert and does not indicate a static entity of musicians who form a permanent arrangement. Thus, many of the musicians will have get back to fulfill personal engagements. Secondly, there is still some hesitancy on the part of entertainment directors at some prisons to accept this kind of show. Eberline mentioned, for examples, that sometimes vague postponements were the response to their attempts to set up a specific date. And then there's always the hassles of security checks on all the members of the group. In the case of this week-end, a list of "doubles" was sent along with the names of the original members. This way, if anyone cancelled, their stand-ins would have already been security checked and there would be no excuse for delays. And finally, there are again the factors of arranging rehearsal times, and transportation.

But all of this may be a little beside the point. The fact is that it can be and is being done.

Cultural Center presents exhibition, workshop

By ROD MAC-JOHNSON
Feature Writer

A collection of sixteen large frame pictures is on display Friday at a one-day photography exhibition and practical workshop organized by the Afro-American Cultural Center at Blyington Street near Hillcrest Dormitory.

The exhibition, whose title-theme is "Wakati Wa Sikukuu" (a Swahili word for carnival time), is described by the head of the Workshop, Ralph Patterson, as "a casual way in encouraging, young black photographers in the art." The aim, he said, is to get more people to visit the Center and learn about some of the things blacks are engaged in.

Questioned as to why a Swahili word was chosen for the exhibition, Patterson said there is a growing awareness of blacks to further identify themselves with the African continent. "We think the exhibition gives us the opportunity to demonstrate this," he said. Swahili is a dialect spoken by over thirteen million people in five countries in East Africa.

Photographs on display depict a broad range of black experiences including some performances of the famous Black Genesis Dance Troupe, a color print of a church setting and UI campus scenes.

Most of the photographs are from the collection of David Stevens, a broadcasting student who has been involved in the art for ten years.

Another feature at the exhibition is a corn-rowing display where visitors can see various kinds of hair-dos.

Coming events scheduled by the Center include a cultural meeting next Friday with African students of the University and a Halloween Night celebration on October 26.

Household Maintenance: Lesson 2

This is the 4th segment of our weekly household-bicycle-automobile maintenance and repair series. We'll continue to bring you another chapter in the Survival Services how-to-do-it manual each Friday. Today's article is the second of our household features. It's another electrical lesson. Future columns will explore the mysteries of singing toilets, dripping faucets, and other problems about the house. Don't hesitate to write if you have a topic in mind you'd like to see us get into.

Replacing a fuse

Last time we told you how to throw your main switch and how to replace a wall switch. Today you'll get a prep course on changing a fuse and replacing a plug receptacle—something simple, something a little more demanding. We'll start with the fuse. The first thing you do when your lights go out is find a flashlight. Now unplug that straw that burned the fuse black. Hint: did you just plug in the iron, toaster, popcorn popper...? With that done, you're ready to find the fuse box. It should be in the basement; look for the place where the wires come in from outside if you can't find it. Pull the master switch before you change the fuse (see lesson 1). You don't have to cut the juice, but it's a good idea, especially if the concrete basement floor is a little damp.

The blown fuse will look different from the others. You'll note a broken wire in the window of one, or perhaps a blackened window. Unscrew the one you suspect and replace it with one that has the same amp rating. Never replace the old fuse with a new one of higher rating; you want the fuse to burn, not your wiring. Throw away the old one.

If you have circuit breakers (a box full of switches) you don't have to buy a new fuse. Just find the switch that's not in line with the rest; turn it off (that's right, off); then turn it on again (so that it lines up with the others).

Replacing a wall outlet

Do blue sparks fly from your wall outlet? It's time to change the receptacle. Go buy a new one, they're standardized, and get your screwdriver.

Again, the first thing you do is cut the power per lesson one. Now go upstairs and remove the cover plate from the receptacle you're going to replace. It's held on by one screw in the center of the plate. Remove the two screws holding the receptacle to the metal box in the wall and pull it out of the wall, with all wires still attached. Now, draw a picture of the thing noting carefully where all the wires go. You're going to put those wires back on the new outlet exactly the way you remove them from the old one, so take a good look at everything before you start removing wires. You'll most likely see either two or four wires, one or two on each side. You say you have an extra green wire connected to a green screw? No sweat, that's the ground wire, and you'll hook it up just like the others to the new receptacle.

If you have black and white wires, you'll note that the black ones go to the brass screws on the side of the receptacle, and the white ones go to the chrome screws. It's very important that you not switch the wires around; it could make for shocks, most unpleasant.

When you're sure that everything is hooked up the way it was before (check your sketch), you can put the receptacle back into its box in the wall and replace the cover plate. Go downstairs and turn on the power again.

There's no problem in doing little jobs like this yourself. If you get the urge to tackle major wiring projects however, you will have to consult the local wiring code and may have to get a permit and inspection. If you don't know much more about electricity than what we've taught you in these two lessons, you'll probably want to read a book or two on wiring before you do anything. Check the library for a copy of the "National Electrical Code" for starters.

Best of erotica is worst

By BOB JONES
Feature Writer

Refocus 74 is presenting "The Best of the Second Annual New York Erotic Film Festival" tonight at 6:00, 8:00 and 10:00 p.m. at the Union Ballroom.

And if this collection is the best, I'd hate to be victim to the worst. Except for a few entries in the approximately hour-and-a-half program, this "Best of the Second..." is hardly more than an atrocious and erratic conglomeration of smirky pornographic tediousness (with sparse, sparse wit) that, worse, tries to pass for eroticism. Let me tell you—it ain't. We're grappling with the old problem of definition again, but to each his own.

What can be said about a group of films that's a veritable grab bag of varying qualities for all proclivities? Getting the show on the road, a host rambles on in a monotone about a press party bacchanal (lasting two and a half weeks) and the filmmakers represented in the "festival" being women, men and "those who aren't too sure yet."

"The Rehearsal" is a strange little number about a woman who collects stuff at the supermarket, like bananas, cucumbers (get all this significant symbolic jazz?) and grapefruit and has a party at home—all by herself. Another entry focuses on one orgasm in the life of a pair of lesbians (and the building up to it), with lots of nitty-gritty close-ups and a soundtrack that's a pain to behold. Not that the fellows don't get equal time. In fact, they're one up on the girls, cuz their choreographed mattress acrobatics are accompanied by piano plunkings. Real class.

The last item skinny-dips into heterosexuality. An ad for a new foam mattress ends up in a menage a trois, demonstrating how three can be an accommodating crowd, indeed.

Two shorts are well-filmed and quite funny, however, and don't deserve such rotten company. They are, I dare say, the festival's high points. "Buried Treasure" is a campy helter-skelter, made after hours at a major animation studio, circa 1924. The hero roams the countryside, wielding his member like a living, detached—which it is, sometimes—entity. He encounters a menagerie of people and, for the heck of it, engages in a round of phallic fencing. Touche!

The other is a fresh and witty sight gag titled "Life with Video." A young lady, watching TV at home, begins conversing with a dude on the screen who spouts about TV's new innovation. He proceeds to demonstrate it first-hand. It's tangy and almost makes up for the sludge marking this festival in toto.

Show a documentary and two Marilyn Monroe films

By JIM FLEMING
Feature Writer

One of the best possible film weekends is here, with two well-touted films downtown and a host of interesting offerings at the Union.

Union fare for last night and tonight is the 1971 Italian production, "Sacco and Vanzetti."

It would be difficult to imagine a more willing subject for this costa-Gavras style political re-creation. Often assuming the position of historical documentary, with actual newsreel footage, off-tint "aged" shots and the like, the film concentrates upon an incident in American history that deserves much more attention still.

Rivalled in this century only by the 1950's McCarthy hearings and our very own Watergate the Sacco and Vanzetti trial is a revealing and revolting illustration of America's institutionalized intolerance.

Arrested in the spring of 1920 on patently trumped-up charges of robbery and murder, the Italian immigrants Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti (a shoemaker and a fish vendor, respectively) became victims of vast and involved political calumny. Sacco and Vanzetti labeled themselves in a number of ways that the nation could not handle. Anarchists, pacifists, labor organizers, and of course Italian peasants, they were easy prey to an apparent conspiracy involving judges, lawyers, a governor, police, and possibly even then-Attorney General Palmer.

Their three-tinged trial calls to mind the Chicago 7, and what with the perjured, paid-off and beaten-up witnesses, the exhibits strangely absent from police files, the omnipresent goon squads squelching protest assemblies and all the rest, it is amazing that it took most of a decade to finally strap them both into the electric chair.

Gauliano Montaldo's direction of this film is spoty, and he clearly lost control of the film at every turn. He allows many scenes to become soppy, propagandistic prattle, and it becomes frequently hard to accept his blind allegiance to The Cause. History has handled this episode well enough to make it a black-and-white issue without his pointing, jabbing finger. Joan Baez is at her best in the soundtrack, however, and the acting is above board at all times, with the portrayal of Vanzetti fine enough for a special Cannes award that year.

Showing at the Union over Saturday and Sunday night is also an excellent double-bill of Marilyn Monroe films. While Billy Wilder's 1959 production "Some Like It Hot" is an entertainment alone, "The Misfits," a 1961 film directed by the incomparable John Huston, takes itself more seriously.

What makes "The Misfits" something to see now, a dozen years after its debut, is not the film's ability to lift the viewer up into its world, but rather the way in which the film itself touches down in the world of 1973. That is, the film becomes more valuable not as an artistic attempt but as an historical document, a shringle to a popular culture not long from us; graves that only now grow grass.

"Misfits" is the last film of Clark Gable, his 67th, and he died shortly after shooting ended, a heart attack at 59.

It is a film that, also upon its completion, sent a clouded Marilyn Monroe to a sanitarium.

It is the first film for which Arthur Miller, the Pulitzer-Prize winning dramaturge, wrote a screenplay. In fact, written first as a short story while he was in Reno divorcing his first wife, the film version of the story ended in his divorce from Marilyn.

Holy Day War drags on; cost of victory will be high

By WILLIAM FLANNERY
Staff Writer

Today is the sixth day of the Holy Day War and although the situation is still fluid certain major points can be discerned.

The principal political and military goals of the Arabs in this war appear to be centering on three points.

First, the Egyptians and the Syrians wanted to destroy the image of Israeli invincibility. The swift and total Israeli victory in the Six Day War in 1967, and the Biblical-like counter-attacks against the Palestinian guerrillas in the period since then, have made the Israelis appear to be military supermen. The initial surprise and the early success of the Arab invasion has badly shaken this popular belief.

The second major point parallels the first. The News analysis

Arabs also wanted to show that they too could fight—and fight well. Their bitter humiliation in the time since the Six Day War has rested heavily on Arab honor. The successes of the first Arab assaults and their audacious defense against Israeli counter-attacks have effectively ended the myth of Arab military incompetence.

In terms of diplomatic-political goals the Arabs were out to recapture at least some of the lands they had lost six years ago.

The Egyptian and Syrian invasion had no hope of retaking all of the former Arab land in the Sinai or the Golan Heights. But the maintenance of even a small beachhead on the east bank of the Suez canal will give the Arabs a major psychological bargaining point with the Israelis.

The retaking of the land captured by the Arabs has proven costly for the Israeli military. The losses of men and weaponry has been high on both sides. But within this very point lies the key to the outcome of the war itself.

If the Israeli victory in 1967 could be compared to the crushing German victory over France in 1940, then the present campaign against the heavily fortified Egyptian beachhead in the Sinai can be compared to an earlier Franco-German encounter: Verdun 1916.

If and when the Israelis attack the Arab positions on the Canal, they will be taking ground in terms of number of dead per yard. The Egyptians have well over 800 tanks on the east bank and have had six days and nights to dig defensive fortification. They also have managed to make effective use of darkness in resupplying their troops on the east bank by means of folding Russian pontoon bridges.

If the Arabs continue to show the same level of stubborn fighting skill, the Israeli counter-attack will be very costly indeed, even though the beachhead may be only six to ten miles deep.

If the Arabs can get the Israeli army bogged down into a protracted war, Israel will suffer massive strategic damage to its military-political-economic power base. Major losses of young Israeli males in a Verdun style 'meatgrinder' will cripple the Jewish nation's future economic and social development.

The Israelis can replace the loss in capital by means of foreign aid and donations, but they can not replace a generation of young men.

The Israelis and the Arabs by design and blunder have found themselves in a human tragedy.

Sun Tzu, Chinese scholar-general of the 3rd century BC, once remarked, "Thus, while we have heard of blundering swiftness in war, we have not yet seen a clever operation that was prolonged."

Option: 'caretaker' or strong '76 contender

Nixon asks aid in replacing Agnew

By LEWIS D'VORKIN
Editor

Spiro Agnew's resignation created a void that will be filled within the next few days and perhaps by the end of the week. White House sources reported Thursday.

When considering how the vacancy will be filled, many politicians and newspapers throughout the country have indicated that Nixon has two options: he can appoint what the Wall Street Journal labels a "caretaker," a man without presidential ambitions who will serve as more or less a figurehead; or a "strong" new vice president who would be Nixon's choice for the GOP's 1976 nomination.

Although Nixon believes he has a free hand in the selection of a new vice president and need not confine himself to a limited field, he asked Republican members of Congress, governors and state party officials Thursday to submit names of suggested vice presidential candidates.

Politicians and administrative officials cited as possible "caretakers" include: Treasury Secretary George Shultz; Senate GOP leader Hugh Scott; Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz.; former Secretary of State William

Rogers, and House Republican leader Gerald Ford. Those considered as candidates who would serve as "strong" vice presidents include: John Connally, who is regarded as a leading potential contender for the 1976 GOP nomination; California Gov. Ronald Reagan; New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, and White House Counselor Melvin Laird.

But according to the 25th Amendment to the Constitution, the President considers major achievements of his administration.

—A man who would go along with the President's decisions, stand up for his programs and not create controversy.

—A man free of any taint from Watergate or any other scandal, whose public image would instill trust in government.

—A man who would be ap-statesman because the Democrats control the Congress, and prominent Republicans would not favor a candidate with an itch for the presidential nomination.

Sens. Charles Percy, R-Ill., and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.—potential candidates for the 1976 Republican presidential nomination—would not approve a Nixon nominee who has higher political will select. Commenting that the new vice president's duties would not be altered, Johnson said, "The significance of the vice president is in the potential that he may become the President and nothing else."

Despite congressional talk of a clause that might be implemented to prohibit the new vice president from running for the presidency, Patterson said, "It would have to be a gentleman's agreement because there is no legal way to do it—it would be unconstitutional."

Daily Iowan News Perspective

Nixon's selection must win majority approval from the Democratic led Senate and House, and there has already developed an undercurrent of bipartisan opposition to former Texas governor Connally, a Nixon favorite.

In light of the amendment and the prevailing political feelings, the Wall Street Journal indicated that Nixon will probably seek as a nominee:

—A man considered qualified for the presidency who, if Nixon died, would carry on the basic foreign policy initiatives that proved rapidly by Congress without a struggle.

The Wall Street Journal concludes that "on the balance, a good guess is that the President will wind up nominating an uncontroversial caretaker who would not threaten ambitious politicians and thus could expect confirmation."

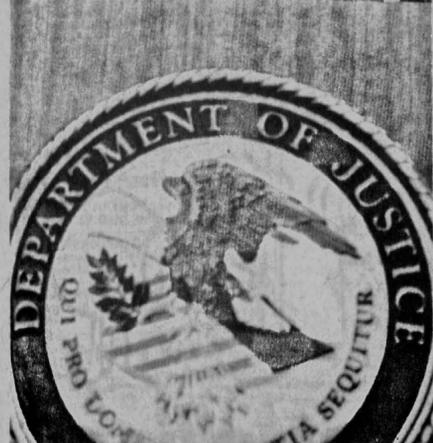

Samuel C. Patterson, a political science professor at the University of Iowa, echoed the newspaper's conclusion and said, "I am inclined to think that the situation will pressure him (Nixon) to name an elder

According to Patterson, Nixon "has Congress over a barrel" because "there are strong pressures to avoid a prolonged controversy in Congress over an appointment, and if he (Nixon) makes a reasonable appointment, Congress will have a hard time not accepting" the President's choice.

Another UI political science professor, Donald Johnson, said Thursday that it's difficult to speculate who the President

Nixon okayed secret bargaining

Elliot L. Richardson

Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson urged consideration and compassion for Spiro T. Agnew. He said at a news conference Thursday that he hopes the American people "understand and support" the agreement that led to the vice president's resignation and admission of income tax evasion.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon approved the secret bargaining that led to Spiro T. Agnew's resignation as vice president and acceptance of a felony conviction, Atty. Gen. Elliot L. Richardson said Thursday.

The White House counsel was the pivotal middleman who brought together the government prosecutors and Agnew's lawyers for negotiations sparing Agnew a prison sentence but subjecting him to public disgrace and possible civil suits for thousands of dollars in back taxes, Richardson said.

In a nationally televised news conference, the attorney general said he hopes "the American people understand and support what has been done."

He said Agnew faces no further federal criminal proceedings based on the nine-month probe of corruption in Maryland politics. A state prosecutor quickly said he plans no action against Agnew.

But Richardson said it's up to the Internal Revenue Service whether to bring civil suits for the collection of substantial but still undetermined sums owed as taxes and penalties on a minimum of $87,500 Agnew allegedly received as illegal payoffs in three public offices, including the vice presidency.

In the gymnasium-like Great Hall of the Justice Department, Richardson fielded questions for an hour at his first news conference since the investigation touched Agnew.

Richardson said U.S. Atty. George Beall in Baltimore decided on July 3 that the charges against Agnew were so serious that the attorney general must be told.

Later that month, Richardson said he related the substance of the charges to White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig and in early August to Nixon himself.

Richardson said neither the White House nor anyone else attempted to quash the probe.

"The President was kept fully informed at all times," the attorney general said. "He fully approved each of the major steps that were taken in the course of the negotiations. He did not participate in the negotiations as such."

Nixon set no limits on the bargaining, Richardson added, but the President "was, of course, concerned as all of us were with the potential consequences of a prolonged and agonizing trial of these issues of fact."

The attorney general said the plea bargaining was set in motion by White House counsel Fred Buzhardt who telephoned him in September to suggest that Richardson meet with Agnew's lawyers. Buzhardt "did not indicate that he was acting at the President's behest," Richardson said.

The bargaining stalled later in September because each side refused to budge. Richardson declined to disclose details, but he and Beall suggested that the U.S. attorney and his assistants were holding out for at least a brief prison sentence.

On Sept. 25, Richardson announced the failure of negotiations and said he had authorized Beall to turn over the Agnew allegations to the grand jury.

SOUND POWER

FOR YOUR GROUP!

Altec 1210A Control Console

The Altec 1210A was designed to work hard and travel fast. It is ideally protected to take all the abuse a station wagon, van, truck or plane has to give. The heavy duty cover completely encloses the control panel to keep the controls free from dirt and dust. When latched shut, the case becomes a rugged piece of luggage. Added reverb control is also included on the 1210A. Every channel is provided with an on-off switch for the reverb circuit in addition to the reverb volume control. The reverb timbre switch is great to brighten and soften sounds and allows just the right reverb for instruments and voice. When the show is over and pack up time comes, the reverb spring automatically locks in place when the console top is latched. This of course eliminates damage to the reverb unit during shipping. As an added feature, the 1210A has a slide switch on each channel for either vocal or instrument selection for optimum reproduction.

B. Caldwell sidelined

Hawks reopen Big Ten season

By BOB DYER
Sports Editor

Iowa will be without the services of sophomore quarterback Butch Caldwell Saturday, as the Hawkeyes continue to seek that elusive first victory at Northwestern. Kickoff is scheduled for 1:30 p.m.

"Caldwell suffered a sprained knee against Arizona and it's been coming along slowly," said Coach Frank Lauterbur.

Kyle Skogman, who started the first three games, will replace Caldwell in the lineup. Freshman Doug Reichardt will be Skogman's backup.

Iowa rushed for 196 yards against Arizona but the passing attack sputtered and netted only 13 yards.

"You've got to put it all together," said Lauterbur. "We need to put together four quarters of good, consistent football."

Northwestern is a Big Ten co-leader, thanks to an opening victory over Michigan State. The Wildcats have since lost three straight non-conference games, to Notre Dame, Pittsburgh, and Ohio University.

The Ohio U. defeat was especially hard to swallow. Northwestern gained over 400 yards total offense, including 311 yards rushing, but fumbled late in the game at the Ohio one-yard line. The Cats lost the ball and the game, 14-12.

The Hawkeyes won 23-12 at Evanston last year after building a 20-0 lead at intermission. The Wildcats got back in the game behind the passing of Mitch Anderson. Anderson went on to lead the Big Ten in total offense, including a record 351 yards passing against Michigan State. The junior quarterback is off to a slow start this season, hitting 26 of 69 for 285 yards.

His primary target is tight end Steve Craig, who's snared seven passes for 66 yards and two TD's.

With a bevy of strong running backs at his disposal, new Coach John Pont has become more ground oriented.

"Northwestern's strength is definitely their running attack," said FXL, "but they also have a fine passing combination in Anderson and Craig."

The Wildcats play a 5-2 defense that concentrates on reading more than penetrating. Its ringleader is linebacker Mike Varty.

"They've got an experienced defense," added Lauterbur. "Except for the Notre Dame game, it's been good."

Iowa will have several of its walking wounded ready for this one. Middle guard Dave Bryant, center Jock Michelosen, cornerback Bobby Salter and linebacker Andre Jackson are all expected to play.

The Hawks have made two other lineup changes. Mark Essy will start at middle guard and freshman Jim Caldwell, who blocked two field goals against Arizona, will be at right corner.

Northwestern quarterback Mitch Anderson hurries his throw during last year's game with the Hawkeyes. Providing the rush for Iowa are former Hawks Mike Dillner, left, and Jerry Nelson. Hawks won 23-12, and hope to repeat Saturday in Evanston.

Met's Staub 'much improved'

NEW YORK (AP) — Armed with an encouraging medical report on right fielder Rusty Staub's shoulder and with their ground crew busily repairing Shea Stadium's ripped up turf, the New York Mets spent Thursday waiting for Oakland and Baltimore to settle baseball's American League title.

The Mets were due to report to Shea Stadium late Thursday and then were to leave for the American League champion's city, where the World Series will start Saturday.

The National League champions hope to have Staub available after the slugger's bruised right shoulder was reported "very much improved," by Dr. Peter LaMotte, the Mets' club physician.

Staub was injured Tuesday making a spectacular catch in the 11th inning against the Cincinnati Reds. He sat out Wednesday's pennant clincher, won by the Mets 7-2.

That victory set off a frightening explosion of fan enthusiasm, with a sea of humanity sweeping across Shea Stadium, engulfing players, police and ushers alike.

Firecrackers exploded, the bases were ripped from their moorings and the field was covered with thousands of fans seeking souvenirs of the championship game.

Huge tufts of grass were ripped out of both the infield and outfield and the ground crew spent Thursday beginning the repair job needed to put the field in shape for next week's World Series games.

Jim Thomson, a vice president and business manager of the Mets, said that 1,200 square feet of sod on the playing field was being replaced. The repair job will cost the club about $2,500, Thomson said.

Meanwhile, New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller wired his congratulations to the Mets. "Right on to the World Series," said the governor's telegram.

"The emergence of our miracle Mets from the cellar to the pennant is stunning good news. Whatever else happens, the world looks a little better from New York for your fantastic feat."

On the line...

Ted McLaughlin, our sponsor at the Annex, is this week's guest prognosticator. After seeing the staff picks, Ted feels we need his help. He's probably right.

If you're the inquisitive type, the reason we didn't have a guest panelist last week was we couldn't get any takers. One look at the slate of games and Scchhhzzaaamm, our potential picker would pull a disappearing act, hurt his/her writing hand or come up with laryngitis. Sometimes all three.

After four weeks I guess it's about time we listed the seasonal standing. Steve McDowell and Wayne "the Sheik" Haddy lead with 30-10 marks. At 29-11 are the quintet of Marty Lange, Tom Larson, Gene Johnson, Mark Scandrett and Wayne Shannon. These standings are for those who have entered all four weeks. Don't worry about it if you haven't.

The Benedict Arnold of print, Editor Lew D'Vorkin, is the only member of the staff to go against the Hawks this weekend. For the first time this year, the contestants have favored the Hawks by an overwhelming 85-17 margin. A definite good omen.

Chuck "Wonderful Luis" Hickman, after battling through the baseball playoffs, has been given a brief respite and promises to continue his comeback. The Sports Editor is trying to start one.

Greg Lund and D'Vorkin are waging a nip and tuck fight for staff honors. This week is a crucial one in newsroom diplomacy.

While less imposing, this week's picks are still formidable. See you Monday.

The measure of an order may be taken in the measure of its men.

In the beginning there was Isaac Hecker. He founded the order in 1858 and his aim was to create an order of priests who would be able to meet the needs of the North American people as they arose in each era, each age. Modern priests who would be modern men. Part of the success of this order, he believed, would lie in the fact that each man would be himself, contributing his own individual talents in his own way for the total good. "The individuality of man," he said, "cannot be too great when he is guided by the spirit of God." And that is just what the Paulists are—individualists. We're proud of our men and of each and every individual contribution—great and small. Whether the Paulist keeps boys off city streets by restoring and re-planting a city park or wins awards for a remarkable TV series—he is responding to the needs as he sees them. Wherever he serves—in a parish or an inner city school... a youth center or on campus... a welfare shelter or in a prison... joining a senior citizens group or in radio, television or publishing, the Paulist is making his own contribution, and keeping alive Father Hecker's dream. After all, there is a lot to live up to and an order is only as good as its men. For more information send for THE PAULIST PAPERS—an exciting new vocation kit of articles, posters and recordings.
