Mr. Objectivity

By a Staff Writer

Economics and culture will be the main arguments going into the 1972 session of Iowa's立法机构, as leaders of both sides look to set the tone for the next two years.

The two parties have been divided over the issue of minimum wage increases for workers in recent months. The Republican Party, led by Senator J. Brian Butler, has been advocating for an increase in the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour, while the Democratic Party, led by Governor Laura Rogers, has proposed an increase to $1.00 per hour.

Leaders on both sides have been discussing the impact of these proposed increases on the economy and the potential for inflation. The Republican leadership has argued that a higher minimum wage would put downward pressure on prices and lead to overall economic growth, while the Democratic leadership has countered that it would lead to higher costs for businesses and ultimately higher prices for consumers.

The two parties have been deadlock over the issue, with neither side willing to give ground. Butler and Rogers have both made public statements vowing to continue their efforts until a compromise is reached.

Both sides have also been monitoring the impact of the proposed increases on their constituents. Butler has been holding town hall meetings across the state to gather input from workers, while Rogers has been reaching out to business owners to hear their reactions.

The issue of minimum wage increases is expected to be a key topic in the upcoming legislative session, with both parties vowing to make it a priority in their efforts to secure a spot on the Iowa Legislature's agenda.

---

Honesty

Mr. Objectivity

By a Staff Writer

Economics and culture will be the main arguments going into the 1972 session of Iowa's立法机构, as leaders of both sides look to set the tone for the next two years.

The two parties have been divided over the issue of minimum wage increases for workers in recent months. The Republican Party, led by Senator J. Brian Butler, has been advocating for an increase in the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour, while the Democratic Party, led by Governor Laura Rogers, has proposed an increase to $1.00 per hour.

Leaders on both sides have been discussing the impact of these proposed increases on the economy and the potential for inflation. The Republican leadership has argued that a higher minimum wage would put downward pressure on prices and lead to overall economic growth, while the Democratic leadership has countered that it would lead to higher costs for businesses and ultimately higher prices for consumers.

The two parties have been deadlock over the issue, with neither side willing to give ground. Butler and Rogers have both made public statements vowing to continue their efforts until a compromise is reached.

Both sides have also been monitoring the impact of the proposed increases on their constituents. Butler has been holding town hall meetings across the state to gather input from workers, while Rogers has been reaching out to business owners to hear their reactions.

The issue of minimum wage increases is expected to be a key topic in the upcoming legislative session, with both parties vowing to make it a priority in their efforts to secure a spot on the Iowa Legislature's agenda.

---

Cloudy

By a Staff Writer

Economics and culture will be the main arguments going into the 1972 session of Iowa's立法机构, as leaders of both sides look to set the tone for the next two years.

The two parties have been divided over the issue of minimum wage increases for workers in recent months. The Republican Party, led by Senator J. Brian Butler, has been advocating for an increase in the minimum wage to $1.25 per hour, while the Democratic Party, led by Governor Laura Rogers, has proposed an increase to $1.00 per hour.

Leaders on both sides have been discussing the impact of these proposed increases on the economy and the potential for inflation. The Republican leadership has argued that a higher minimum wage would put downward pressure on prices and lead to overall economic growth, while the Democratic leadership has countered that it would lead to higher costs for businesses and ultimately higher prices for consumers.

The two parties have been deadlock over the issue, with neither side willing to give ground. Butler and Rogers have both made public statements vowing to continue their efforts until a compromise is reached.

Both sides have also been monitoring the impact of the proposed increases on their constituents. Butler has been holding town hall meetings across the state to gather input from workers, while Rogers has been reaching out to business owners to hear their reactions.

The issue of minimum wage increases is expected to be a key topic in the upcoming legislative session, with both parties vowing to make it a priority in their efforts to secure a spot on the Iowa Legislature's agenda.
Program offers community work

Medical students sent into field

By JOE DUNIVER

Medical students are being utilized as part of a new orientation-visitation program at the University of Iowa Medical College. The program was begun on the request of the university's central administration

The program is sponsored by the University of Iowa Medical College and includes five weeks of training, beginning this summer.

An orientation leader, program associate and two student volunteers are expected to participate. They will visit five hospitals in the area and will stay overnight.

The program is designed to familiarize students with the local hospitals and to help them understand the different aspects of medical care.

In addition to the hospitals, the program includes visits to the University of Iowa Medical College.

The program is open to all students, whether they are in their first, second, third or fourth year of study.

The University of Iowa Medical College is one of the few universities in the United States that offers a program of this type.

The program is also open to any medical student who is interested in learning more about the medical profession.

By LINDA HANSON

A new orientation program is being conducted this week and is expected to encourage more freshmen and transfer students to enroll at the University of Iowa.

The program is part of an effort to increase the number of students enrolling at the university.

An orientation leader and two student volunteers will be present at the orientation.

The program is designed to familiarize students with the university's facilities and to help them understand the different aspects of college life.

In addition to the hospitals, the program includes visits to the University of Iowa Medical College.

The program is open to all students, whether they are in their first, second, third or fourth year of study.

The program is also open to any medical student who is interested in learning more about the medical profession.

By HELEN VANDERLINDE

A new orientation program is being conducted this week and is expected to encourage more freshmen and transfer students to enroll at the University of Iowa.

The program is part of an effort to increase the number of students enrolling at the university.

An orientation leader and two student volunteers will be present at the orientation.

The program is designed to familiarize students with the university's facilities and to help them understand the different aspects of college life.

In addition to the hospitals, the program includes visits to the University of Iowa Medical College.

The program is open to all students, whether they are in their first, second, third or fourth year of study.

The program is also open to any medical student who is interested in learning more about the medical profession.

By LINDA HANSON

A new orientation program is being conducted this week and is expected to encourage more freshmen and transfer students to enroll at the University of Iowa.

The program is part of an effort to increase the number of students enrolling at the university.

An orientation leader and two student volunteers will be present at the orientation.

The program is designed to familiarize students with the university's facilities and to help them understand the different aspects of college life.

In addition to the hospitals, the program includes visits to the University of Iowa Medical College.

The program is open to all students, whether they are in their first, second, third or fourth year of study.

The program is also open to any medical student who is interested in learning more about the medical profession.

By LINDA HANSON

A new orientation program is being conducted this week and is expected to encourage more freshmen and transfer students to enroll at the University of Iowa.

The program is part of an effort to increase the number of students enrolling at the university.

An orientation leader and two student volunteers will be present at the orientation.

The program is designed to familiarize students with the university's facilities and to help them understand the different aspects of college life.

In addition to the hospitals, the program includes visits to the University of Iowa Medical College.

The program is open to all students, whether they are in their first, second, third or fourth year of study.

The program is also open to any medical student who is interested in learning more about the medical profession.
Burlington crosstown plan rejected

By CRAIG BERNHARDT

The Burlington crosstown plan that would have widened the street and its inability to cope with traffic was rejected by the Burlington City Manager Ray Wells on Thursday.

The report states that by reducing its width, thereby discouraging through traffic, the city has increased the level of traffic congestion, making it difficult for the city to afford this level of service.

The report recommends that the city reconsider its plans and consider other alternatives to handle the growing traffic problems.

In other conclusions, the report states that the city's current traffic management policies are not adequate to handle the increasing traffic demands.

The report concludes that the city must take immediate action to address the traffic congestion and improve its traffic management policies.

The report is expected to be presented to the city council for consideration and action.

The report is available for public review at the city hall, and the city council will hold a public hearing on the matter at a future date.

The Daily Iowa, June 21, 1974 - Page 3

---

Canadian candidates ready for July general election

By CRANDALL DROZD

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau's national election campaign is entering its final days as the country prepares to vote on July 2.

The Liberal Party, led by Trudeau, is expected to win a majority of seats in the House of Commons, with the Conservatives finishing as the runner-up.

The election has been characterized by a focus on the economy and the question of taxation.

Trudeau's government has been criticized for its handling of the economy, with many voters concerned about rising inflation and the cost of living.

The Liberals have promised to lower taxes, while the Conservatives have offered a tax cut package.

The election is expected to determine the future of the Trudeau government and the overall political landscape in Canada.

The outcome will have implications for a range of policy areas, including the economy, social programs, and foreign relations.

The election is set to take place on July 2, with polls closing at 9 p.m.

The results are expected to be announced on July 3.

---

Crossword Puzzle

Across

1. Magician (7)
2. Longest (6)
3. Nuts (6)
4. Doctor (8)
5. Musician (7)
6. Clothing (7)
7. Animal (7)
8. Note (7)
9. Airplane (8)
10. Sport (8)

Down

11. Biscuit (7)
12. Fruit (8)
13. Furniture (8)
14. Book (9)
15. Drink (7)
16. Vegetable (8)
17. Theatrical term (7)
18. Instrument (8)
19. Bird (7)
20. Animal (7)

---

Innovations

2 drinks for the price of one

4:30-6 P.M.
The Cheyenne vs. the Bureau of Indian Affairs
Coal Leasing Rights in the West

The Final Solution

President Nixon is now home from his highly successful trip abroad where he took the diplomatic victories of Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and the Secretary of Defense to the diplomatic settlement between Israel and Arab states. But any attempts to bring peace to the bloodied lands of the Mid-East will fail if there is no serious effort made to end the preventable suffering of the Palestinian refugees.

The future of the Palestinian people is the future of the Mid-East. This includes not just the two states of Israel and Jordan, but also all Palestinian communities who live in the Arab lands of Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, but the refugees in the United Nations' camps as well.

Since the June War of 1967, the bulk of the Palestinian refugees against Israel were from the harrassing Arab States. But the greatest threat to the present status is the Jewish state in the one million Arabs (1/4 quarter of Israel's total population) existing within the hordes of "Greater Israel" of this total, over 400,000 Palestinians still live in refugee camps. The population of these camps, and the other Arabs living in the Gaza and the West Bank, have been integrated into the Israeli economy, mainly through the creation of a form of feudal and indentured labor systems for farming and light industry. This force of cheap labor is critically important for Israel's already weakened economy.

If these Palestinian remain under Israeli control, and are not allowed to establish their own homelands, the potential for an internal war at some time in the future will be almost certain to occur.

The Israeli government undoubtedly attempt to be better the lot of the refugees. In time the once and future Palestinians will likely have the best housing, health care, education, and standard of living of any unskilled day laborer in the Mid-East. But they will have no political rights, they will not be able to vote, they will not be allowed to keep second homes or farms, they are second class citizens in a Jewish State. A situation which is ripe for revolution.

Unless the rights of the Palestinians are taken to heart, and in a Palestinian nation established (perhaps on the Banks of the Jordan), the future of the area will be very grim indeed.

William Planeray

The Amazing World of I-80

or Monsters I Have Known

One night last week I was cruising the I-80 in my CB radio,4 answering the occasional outbursts of "This is Fat Frank in Plummer, what ya got for me?" or "Hey, Ken in Coalville, is there a secondhand bed for sale." Suddenly I heard a CB call that吸引了 my attention. Was it a tell-tale echo of some horror story I've read or seen? The call was: "This is Bozo the Organ Grinder in French Camp. Hey, folks, I'm selling my car."

I tuned in to listen. "Well, folks, I'm selling my car, the sticker price is $1,500. In very good condition. It's a 1979 Buick Century. Only 70,000 miles. In very good condition, folks."

I was sold. "Hey, how do I get it?"

"Well, you call me, and I'll be at the Flying J on I-80 tomorrow. I'll have the keys and the title in hand."

I tuned out, thinking I'd interview some monsters from I-80. But as it turns out, Bozo was a real monster, a great car salesman. He was a great storyteller, a great man.""Now, folks, I've been in this business for 25 years, and I've interviewed thousands of people, and I've sold thousands of cars."

"But, folks, the biggest sale of my life was made in my last week of business."

"I was at the Flying J on I-80, selling cars, and I was offered a job to sell insurance."

"But, folks, I never sold any insurance, and I was afraid to take it."

"But, folks, I sold the insurance, and I've been selling it ever since."
Threat of the Devil in Miss Blair

The former Repertory Company brings one of its K. C. State Theatre Playhouse productions to town with a touring production of The Crucible. The lead role of Abigail Williams is played by Elizabeth MacFarland. The company is under the direction of John Goff, the director of the company's previous production of The Exorcist. This production is set to open on Friday, June 7, at the Iowa City Civic Center. The show is expected to run for five performances, with weekend matinees and evening shows. The production is based on the 1953 novel by Arthur Miller and is a classic tale of witchcraft and persecution. The company is known for its high-quality productions and is expected to attract a large crowd. The Crucible is a thought-provoking play that raises questions about justice, power, and the nature of evil. It is a must-see for anyone interested in theater or history. The production will be directed by John Goff, who is known for his skillful direction of previous productions. The Crucible is a timeless story that continues to resonate with audiences today.
Floyd flashes 65

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Gary Floyd, making the form that once made him one of the most feared putting players in the game, faced a difficult challenge in the final round. The 5-foot-10, 140-pound Floyd, who has been hampered by a neck injury, started the day of the R.J. Corman Classic with a 5-foot (1.5-meter) putt on the first hole at the heretofore unknown Firestone Country Club in 35 strokes.

That started him on a one-shot advantage over 5-foot-10, 133-pound redhead Tom Kite, who tied for first of two last holes in a 35-stroke round. Floyd started out of the first hole with a 3-foot (0.9-meter) putt for a 71, while Kite missed a 4-foot (1-meter) putt for a 72.

Kite, who had been in the lead, had a three-stroke lead after the first round and a one-stroke lead after the second round, but was on the verge of losing his lead as he started the final round.

Defending champ Mills rallies to tie Haynie for LPGA lead

SUTTON, Mass. (AP) — Defending champion Mary Mills rallied with a 68 in the final round to tie Sandra Haynie for the lead at the New England Ladies' Open Golf Championship. Mills, 36, will be paired with Haynie, 33, in the final round.

Haynie had a 3-under 69 in the final round to finish at 13-under 209, a stroke ahead of Mills, who carded a 4-under 68.

Haynie, who won the tournament last year, tied for second in the first round but fell off the pace in the final round.

Knick's drop Reed

BELLAMY forced to retire

ATLANTA (AP) — Hall of Fame Third baseman Knick's Ozzie Smith announced his retirement from baseball on Thursday after 19 seasons in the major leagues. Smith, 44, had announced his retirement plans earlier this week.

Smith played his entire career with the St. Louis Cardinals, where he was a seven-time All-Star. He was a key member of the 1985 and 1987 World Series championship teams.

Smith's career was marked by his ability to hit for average and his defense in the field. He was known for his speed and agility, and was a key player for the Cardinals in the 1980s.

Smith's retirement comes after a long career in the major leagues. He was a major league player from 1974 to 1993, and was inducted into the National Baseball Hall of Fame in 2009.

Smith is considered one of the most talented third basemen in baseball history, and is known for his exceptional fielding and his ability to hit for average. He holds numerous records for the Cardinals and is considered one of the best third baseman of all time.