Nigeria: 14 Years of Freedom

For most of the 1980s, Nigeria was a military dictatorship. However, in 1999, the country held its first democratic elections since independence. The victory of Olusegun Obasanjo marked the beginning of a new era for Nigeria. The country has made significant strides in terms of economic growth and political stability.

Ford's Economic Plan

At the stroke of its decisions from the Economic Summit of last week, a few disquieting facts about the president's economic plan begin to emerge. A strong sense of the texture of President Ford's economic plans, and even the white paper that accompanied it, is the work of the economic advisory staff.

The threat of increasing the gasoline sales tax by 38 to 39 cents a gallon was an idea that first came to the attention of the public and the press after the economic advisory staff had quietly shot down by Democratic members of Congress and the press as an impractical alternative. It was one of the greatest economic measures on the lower and middle classes. But this statement was passed down to someone in the White House.

Although Press Secretary Ron Nessen maintains that the tax increase is still under study and has not been approved by the President, it still shows the great anti-consumer direction of the White House economic thinking.

The Economic Summit, and the simmering fight between the administration's top economic planners ever since Ford took office, has shown that the President is not in the same league in his new house. There are still many holdovers from the Nixon administration who are exuding a strongly conservative influence upon President Ford's economic policies.

Given the basically "go slow" orientation of President Ford's economic thinking, the economic advisory staff has been actively working with the conservative advisers of the President (secretary of the treasury William Simon and chairman of the council of Economic Advisers Allan Greenspan in particular) to excise a very strong influence upon the President's proposed economic program, which is to be released next week.

The general sweep of the upcoming Ford plan will be heavy on demand-side business and weak on the side to aid the consumer. It will also likely be based on more traditional economic methods, which, given the previous crises of inflation and recession, will likely prove to be too little too late.

The real danger for the President is that he will be putting forth an economic program which will be both unworkable in a practical sense and impossible to get through a divided Congress.

Physician Assistants

To the Editor:

In July 1984 the National Board of Medical Examiners announced that effective July 1985 all physician assistants were to be examined by the National Board for Physician Assistants. The goal of the national examination for Physician Assistants was to identify those who had the ability to practice medicine. In doing so, the College of Osteopathic Medicine wanted to be sure the patients that would benefit were provided a service.

By the year 1985, the first graduating class that would be eligible to take the new examination was to be graduating from a medical assisting program. The test was to be given on the campus of the University of Iowa College of Medicine. The College of Osteopathic Medicine wanted to be sure the patients that would benefit from these schools were provided a service.

The Iowa P.A. Program is a true community of practice, and the Iowa P.A. Program's national examination has been a step toward the opening up of the P.A. Certification Exam to non-graduates of the Iowa P.A. Program. This opening of the exam to non-graduates of the Iowa P.A. Program is long overdue.

In the Sept. 30 article on physician's assistants (P.A.s), Dr. James Judd said any new role would have to be "meaningful." This would mean that any new role for the certificated P.A. would once again be through schools.

In light of the changing vision of health care in the country, it is up to today in terms of all the costs. But cannot be true.

What is needed in a new system for evaluating the importance of effective care, and the impact of these roles, is a shift from the traditional role of the physician's assistant to a more general role for the institutional role for the physician's assistant. This would include all the roles that are now being evaluated.

What is needed in our new system for evaluating the importance of effective care, and the impact of these roles, is a shift from the traditional role of the physician's assistant to a more general role for the institutional role for the physician's assistant.

Mulroy typifies new Army 'dual career'

BY RAY HAMILTON

"Believing as I do that our service in the armed forces is an important step in our education, I don't believe it's likely I'll stay in the service for my entire career," Mulroy said last week.

On his desk, in the right hand corner, sits a framed picture of his college football coach, early 60s style. Mulroy said he and his coach were wartime roommates in the Army.

"I received a commission in the Army in 1973. I decided in 1974 that I was going to go back to school. I went to the University of Washington and got a degree in broadcast journalism in 1975. I returned to the service in 1976." Mulroy said.

In his new job, he said, his top priority is his military and political duties.

"I'm working on the military side of things now, the public relations and propaganda side of things." Mulroy said.
