Democrats seeking unity at midterm miniconvention

By MARK COREN

"I don't belong to the organized political party—"I'm a Democrat."

This week, party leaders might be axing at whether the Democratic party leadership could agree to the objectives of the miniconvention in Kansas City this weekend.

The leaders, however, will be busy at the convention, which is scheduled for this weekend in Kansas City, Kansas. If they succeed, the party will be able to take the first step toward unity.

Democratic National Committee Chairman Howard Dean and Democratic Senator Charles Grassley, a leader of the party, are hoping that their party, which has struggled to find a way forward, will emerge from the convention with a new platform. They believe that the party needs to be more inclusive and that the miniconvention will be a step in that direction.

The miniconvention in Kansas City is a new concept in Democratic politics. The convention was modeled after the 1968 convention, with its primary purpose being to approve a party charter, which will then be sent to the states for ratification.

However, the Charter Commission, in proposing the document for ratification in the same way as the 1968 convention, split with numerous others. The weighting was between the "liberal reformists" and the "conservatives," who wish to reduce the party's role in the nominating process, and where the new document begins to matter.

The convention has resulted in the following issues to the proposed charter:—

—Whether the platform convention should become a quadrennial event, or held only when the need for one arises—

—Whether the "liberal" provision for selecting certain state delegations in the nominating process should be set aside, or should be included.

—Whether the "conservative" provision for selecting state delegations in the nominating process should be included.

—Whether the "rule" provision for selecting state delegations in the nominating process should be included.

—Whether the "rule" provision for selecting state delegations in the nominating process should be included.

—Whether the "rule" provision for selecting state delegations in the nominating process should be included.

Recession shrinks compensation

Unemployment "costing" states

By LOUISE COOK

Associated Press Writer

Growing losses at unemployment compensation funds and rising numbers of claimants indicate unemployment "costing" the states is likely to become a major factor in the country's economic picture.

"In all probability the total compensation now being paid Unemployment Insurance beneficiaries will exceed last year's total," said Paul C. Haney, director of the state's Department of Employment Security. "This is the first time in the history of unemployment insurance that the number of claimants has exceeded the number of beneficiaries.

Ethiopia is both capitalistic and feudalistic, providing a contradictory environment. Its economy is based on traditional agriculture and pastoralism, which is dominated by large landowners and landlords. However, there are also small-scale farmers and pastoralists who possess their own land and livestock. The country is rich in natural resources, including gold, silver, and precious stones, as well as extensive farmland and grazing land.

Ethiopia has a long and complex history, dating back to the 12th century BC. It was founded in 1325 AD by Emperor Menelik II, who claimed to be the son of King Solomon of Israel and the Queen of Sheba. The country was later ruled by the Axumite Empire, which controlled it from the 4th to the 11th century AD. In the 16th century, Ethiopia was conquered by the Ottoman Empire, and it remained under Ottoman control until 1889.

In 1889, Emperor Menelik II regained control of Ethiopia and established the modern nation-state. Ethiopia has a multiparty democracy, with a president and a parliament elected by popular vote. The country has a capitalistic economy, with a mix of state-owned and private enterprises. It has made significant progress in recent years, with a focus on education, healthcare, and economic development.

However, Ethiopia still faces many challenges, including poverty, inequality, and food insecurity. The country is also vulnerable to disasters such as drought and conflict, which can disrupt its economy and social stability. Despite these challenges, Ethiopia has made remarkable progress in recent years, and there is hope for a brighter future. The country continues to work towards achieving its goals and improving the lives of its people.

Lafore: survival in the sticks

By MICHAEL SAWERS

Half Writer

“Every time I think that people are losing their sense of humor...”

Lafore is the head of the history department at the University of Iowa, Iowa City, and is approximately 50 years old. In a Harper’s magazine article, “Lafore...,” he discusses the tendency for the East to see Iowa as a remote, backward place. He says that Iowa’s history is rich and complex, and that it is a place of great potential for those who are willing to look beyond the surface.

Lafore is a member in good standing of the Eastern know-it-alls he knows, and in his article, Iowans tend to view Easterners in the same way. He says that Iowa, his native state, is a place of great potential for those who are willing to look beyond the surface.

The article, entitled “Lafore...,” was published in Harper’s. Lafore received a tremendous amount of favorable response from people who said that it was about time someone said something nice about Iowa. He says that Iowa is a place of great potential for those who are willing to look beyond the surface.

Correction

I should like to take this opportunity to correct an error in my review of Hugh Will’s Spancker, Liederbuch on page 68 of the December 1964 issue of the Quarterly Review of Books. I did not get in front of another cab. I should have mentioned that Iowa was a place of great potential for those who are willing to look beyond the surface.

Fricke said that the main reason for the cigarette rip-off is the high costs associated with smoking. The costs add up, and it's not uncommon for people to spend large sums of money on cigarettes. People who smoke often end up spending more than they need to, and it's a problem that needs to be addressed.

Iowa wrestling Coach Gary Kyzer was shooting at his heart.

"I want to get the bed and I don't view if we have to stay here all night to do it. Get him out of here and get him into surgery."

Iowa's normally tough defense against Kansas Tuesday night was owed to the fact that the Jayhawks set up for the game with a pair of 6-6 guards in Robert Jones and

Rich Stabler. The Jayhawks will
