Ford raps Congressional actions

The President took exception Thursday to the recently enacted tuition "freeze" law, saying it would give students too much leverage over schools and higher education officials.

At a meeting of the American Council of Education, Ford said it was "a self-defeating concept" to pass legislation that would keep tuitions frozen for a year.

"In my view," Ford said, "it is better to let the market forces work, and if a school has a financial problem, let the public be aware of it and let the school's problems be solved the same way the rest of society is solving its problems."

Regents cancel ‘overload’ tuition fees at universities

The University of Wisconsin System's nine Regents have agreed to remove "overload" fees from university tuition bills, pending legal advice, in an effort to avoid a court challenge to the fee practice.

The fees, which are designed to keep students from taking more credits than they can handle, have been under attack in recent weeks by the American Association of University Professors and the American Federation of Teachers.

The Regents, meeting Thursday, voted unanimously to remove the "overload" fees from the tuition bills of the nine University of Wisconsin campuses. The action was taken on the recommendation of the university's budget director, William C. McClellan, who said the fees are "not constitutional and are not needed."

Police beat

You've heard it before, folks. "If the phone is wet, dry it. If the phone is hot, dry it. If the phone is pulled from the "Dover box," dry it. If you have a water damage claim, call your insurance company." This was the advice given by the Police Chief to residents who received a wet phone.

The Chief also reminded residents to keep their doors locked and to be aware of their surroundings. He said that the Police Department had received several reports of break-ins and thefts in recent weeks.

Increased costs flatten plans for I.C.-Coronalea bikeway

BY BILL BYRNE

Plans for completing an Iowa City-Coralville bikepath won't go far. The Daily Iowan has learned.

The new bikeway, part of the Great American Rail Trail, was estimated to cost about $800,000. The money for the project is a combination of state and federal grants and an estimated $300,000 in matching funds.

The project's coordinator, Susan Upton, said the state's portion of the project is expected to be completed this summer. However, the federal portion of the project is still in the works.

Upton said the project is on hold due to increased costs. The cost of materials has gone up significantly due to inflation, she said.

The project is expected to be completed by late 2024.

Record number of Americans collect unemployment checks

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of Americans collecting unemployment benefits increased last week to 6.6 million, a sign that the labor market remains weak despite recent improvements.

A total of 6.6 million people were collecting unemployment benefits the week ending Friday, up 44,000 from the previous week, according to the Labor Department. The number of people collecting benefits has been inching higher since the start of the year, reflecting a sluggish job market.

The increase was not surprising, given that it's the time of year when people are less likely to seek work because of the colder weather. The number of people filing for unemployment benefits has been falling, but it's still well above pre-pandemic levels.

The number of people collecting unemployment benefits is up 4.2% from a year ago, when the coronavirus pandemic first hit the U.S. economy. It's still below the peak of 18 million that was reached in spring 2020, when millions of Americans lost their jobs as the virus spread across the country.

The increase in the number of people collecting benefits comes as the economy continues to recover from the pandemic-induced recession. However, the job market remains sluggish, with many employers citing difficulties in finding qualified workers.

The Labor Department said Thursday that 620,000 people filed for unemployment benefits last week, up from 607,000 the previous week. The number of people collecting benefits has been inching higher since the start of the year, reflecting a sluggish job market.

Recoding the Law

This Monday, the Iowa Senate will begin their debate on Senate File 165, or the Labor Relations Amendment, which will make making a new labor relations law in Iowa. The bill is in many ways a success story, as it has been re-written and re-written the state's current laws, many of which are outdated and no longer viable.

Following the conclusion of the bill in the Senate, much of the bill is likely to be deferred until the next session of the legislature. The debate on the bill will likely last for hours, and many of the amendments will be defeated. The bill's author, Senator Jack Williams, has already stated that it is unlikely that the bill will be passed in its current form. However, the bill has received widespread support from labor organizations and many members of the public.

The bill is expected to face a number of challenges in its passage through the House of Representatives, where it is currently pending. The House is expected to consider the bill in the early months of the next session, and the debate is likely to be intense. If passed, the bill would make significant changes to the state's labor relations law, including the creation of new labor relations agencies, the strengthening of penalties for violations of labor laws, and the provision of new rights to employees.

The bill is likely to face strong opposition from businesses and industry groups, who argue that it would create unnecessary regulation and increase costs. It is also expected to face opposition from some labor unions, who argue that it would weaken their ability to negotiate fair wages and working conditions.

The bill's passage through both houses of the legislature is far from guaranteed, and it is likely that it will face intense debate and amendment in both chambers. However, the bill is seen as a significant step forward in the effort to modernize Iowa's labor relations law, and it is expected to receive widespread support from labor advocates and union supporters.

AFSCME On Job Protection

AFSCME, a labor organization representing state workers, has called for the protection of state workers' jobs in the face of budget cuts and layoffs. The organization has been working with workers to ensure that their jobs are protected and that they are not subjected to unfair layoffs.

The organization has been working to ensure that layoffs are conducted fairly and that workers are not unfairly targeted. It has also been working to ensure that workers have access to the resources and support they need to successfully navigate the challenges of the current economic environment.

This week, AFSCME announced that it has reached an agreement with the state to ensure that layoffs will be conducted fairly and that workers have access to the resources and support they need to successfully navigate the challenges of the current economic environment.

The agreement includes provisions for the establishment of a job protection task force, which will work to ensure that layoffs are conducted fairly and that workers have access to the resources and support they need to successfully navigate the challenges of the current economic environment.

Mixed emotions found on each Valentine's Day

By The Associated Press

Michael Atkins will not be home on Valentine's Day, but for the first time, his wife will be there to give him his beating heart.

Ten-year-old Michael Atkins, who is recovering from a heart transplant at Children's Hospital Medical Center in Denver, is expecting his heart donor to show up on Valentine's Day to present him with his new organ.

The heart donor's name is Curtis Kane, a 16-year-old boy from Minnesota who died of leukemia last June.

Atkins, who received the heart transplant last month, said he is looking forward to seeing Kane's mother, Christine, and his father, Michael, on Valentine's Day.

"I want to see my heart donor," Atkins said. "I want to see my heart."
Soviet censorship "self-imposed"

By ROBERTO GORZ

In the final issue of the Cornell German Studies Newsletter, a contributor observes that the "main type of censorship in the Soviet Union is a self-imposed censorship."

When discussing Soviet literature, a leading Soviet literary critic, Yuri Glaznov, states in an interview in the journal "Nasha Mladost," that the "atmosphere of fear in Soviet society is reflected in Soviet literature."

In his article, "The Censorship of Soviet Literature," Glaznov notes that the "Soviet Union is a society in which the state has absolute power."

Glaznov further states that the "Soviet Union is a society in which the state has absolute power."

The Soviet Union is a society in which the state has absolute power. The state controls all aspects of life, including literature. This is reflected in the works of many Soviet writers, who are often forced to write works that conform to the state's ideological and political requirements.

Some writers have been able to avoid censorship by writing in the "grey zone," where their works are not officially banned, but are also not officially promoted. This is a delicate balance, as writers who are too close to the state can be imprisoned or executed.

Glaznov concludes his article by stating that the "Soviet Union is a society in which the state has absolute power."

Television: the war, once more

By JOHN BOWIE

Compass Editor

Throughout the 1960s the commercial television networks came to be the country's largest disseminators of Vietnam war coverage. But now in the late 1970s, it is clear that American television networks have become the country's largest disseminators of Vietnam war coverage by a different method. The networks may not be as effective in communicating the war to the American public, but they are now able to do so on a much larger scale.

Television networks have always been able to influence public opinion by providing a constant stream of news and entertainment. But in the 1960s, television networks were mainly focused on providing entertainment and information about the war. They were not able to provide a comprehensive view of the war, as news programs were often interrupted by commercials and other programming.

In the 1970s, however, television networks have become more effective in communicating the war to the American public. They have done this by providing a continuous stream of war coverage, often interrupted by commercials.

The networks have been able to do this by using a variety of techniques. They have used news programs to provide coverage of the war, and have also used entertainment programs to provide a more positive view of the war. They have also used commercials to promote the war, as well as to sell products and services related to the war.

The networks have also been able to use the war as a way to promote their own interests. They have used the war to promote their own programming, and have also used it to promote their own political views.

In conclusion, television networks have become the country's largest disseminators of Vietnam war coverage by a different method. They are now able to do so on a much larger scale, and have been able to use the war as a way to promote their own interests.
Minimal subject matter, maximum effect

Bert Yarborough's photographs, on exhibit until Feb. 27 at the Art Museum's new photography gallery, are the essence of that phrase. All of them are from the same limited edition of 50 prints. Yarborough maintains a balance between subject matter and image manipulation. He manages to squeeze his meaning as an idea, while leaving his prints as objects. These are his manipulated prints, serving as a sort of visual bridge, linking the viewer with the world of ideas. Perhaps the artist's personality was too much to be contained.

It’s been a year of hard knocks for the Hawkeye women’s basketball team under Coach Gary Kurdelmeier. Three years ago the Hawkeyes were Big Ten champions and No. 1-ranked in the nation — now, they are in the middle of the pack in the Big Ten.

The strongest argument for Hawkeyes fans is that the team’s 156-158 record is the best in the Big Ten this year. The 158 marks the best record in the nation.

Women’s teams all on the road

The Hawkeye women’s basketball team is on the road all this weekend. They’ll be in Minnesota on Friday and then at Ohio State on Saturday.

The team, which is currently in fifth place in the Big Ten standings, is coming off a 65-31 win over Indiana last weekend. The Husker game was a big one for the Hawkeyes, who had lost their previous three games.

The next few weeks will be crucial for the Hawkeyes as they try to keep pace with the top teams in the conference. A win over Minnesota on Friday would be a huge boost for their confidence.
