Center for Peace to disband; no support

By MARIA LANG

The Center for Peace and Justice in Dallas, an umbrella organization for a number of local organizations, is preparing to close its doors because of an insufficient budget, according to its board members.

The Center for Peace and Justice was founded in 1977 with the aim of promoting peace and justice issues. Over the years, it has worked on various projects, including human rights, environmental issues, and economic justice. However, the organization has faced financial challenges in recent years, and it appears that the final decision to disband has been made.

The Center's board members have reached a consensus that the organization cannot continue to operate with the current funding levels. They have consulted with various stakeholders, including local businesses and community leaders, to explore potential avenues for funding, but ultimately, they have determined that the Center does not have the resources to sustain its operations.

The decision to disband was made after a comprehensive evaluation of the Center's financial situation. The board members have been working diligently to secure alternative funding sources, but they have been unable to find a viable solution.

The Center for Peace and Justice has had a significant impact on the local community, and its closure is a loss for those who support its mission. The board members have expressed their commitment to continuing the organization's work in other capacities and are exploring new avenues to promote peace and justice in Dallas.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Trade Commission is investigating Safeway Inc., the nation's third-largest supermarket chain, for possibly overcharging customers by failing to post advertised sales and special advertised products and selling those items at the regular price.

The FTC said it will seek to determine whether Safeway violated the 1973 Consumer Price Index Act, which requires retailers to advertise sales and special advertised products and sell those items at the advertised price.

N.Y. negotiators hope to end strike

By The Associated Press

Negotiators in the New York school strike hope an agreement can be reached Monday night and the city's 1.1 million students could be back in class Wednesday. Teachers' strikes affecting some 1.7 million other students continued in Chicago and cities in six other states.

As talks resumed in Chicago, the teachers' union said it may set up alternative schools and the school board threatened to seek an injunction blocking the strike. And in Wilmington, Del., police told all principals teachers under a contract of court order in hopes of preventing any bargaining.

A strike in Closter Park, N.J., was also expected to be renewed because of the contract dispute. Union and management lawyers were scheduled to appear in court to request a temporary restraining order to prevent the strike.

Some states have similar court orders in place. Connecticut, Delaware, Kansas, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin, as well as in New York and New Jersey.

In New York City, where the negotiations have been intense in recent weeks, the teachers' union said it may raise the issue of back-to-back waves with students in some districts. This would add to the pressure on the board, which is set to present its proposal at Monday night's meeting.

The New York negotiations were to resume Monday evening after a weekend break. With voting rules under the United Federation of Teachers (UFT), scheduled for a vote by its delegates later in the day, the agreement must be reached by then or the union's members will have the option to strike. Doderer said that the union's members were prepared to take action if necessary.

The majority of the union's members have already voted to authorize a strike if an agreement cannot be reached. Doderer added that the union has not yet decided on the timing of any potential strike.

NFL players' union lodges for walking on Patriots' behalf

Tom Coughlin, the NFL's executive director, and the NFL Players Association have been at odds with the New England Patriots over what the players say is an unfair practice. The Patriots were reportedly using a garbage bag to cover the slot receiver during the team's practice sessions. Coughlin said the Patriots were doing it to protect the slot receiver from the elements.

"They're just trying to protect their slot receiver from the weather," Coughlin said. "They're not doing it to catch them in the rain." Coughlin said the Patriots have been using the tactic for several weeks and that he has been in contact with the league's officials to try to stop it.

As a result of the Patriots' action, the NFL Players Association has filed a formal complaint with the league. The complaint alleges that the Patriots are using a garbage bag to cover the slot receiver in an attempt to hide the receiver from the players on the field.
