UI officials named in cover-up

By MARIA LAMORE

Three University of Iowa faculty members were named in a cover-up of alleged illegal and unethical conduct at the university in a story published today.

The investigation was initiated by the Office of the Vice President for Administration and Finance, which oversaw the University of Iowa Transportation Services Department.

James Eick, the former president of the American Association of University Professors, said the administration was informed about the conduct in July 2004. He added that the university's policies prohibited parking recommendations.

David N. Kie, Director of Parking Services, said the parking recommendations were in place to ensure the safety of students and faculty.

Some faculty members support ‘pulling the plug’

By BRONIA HULK

UI faculty members are expressing concern over a proposal to discontinue the automated parking system on campus.

The proposal was initially made by David N. Kie, Director of Parking Services, in February 2005. The faculty members are concerned about the impact on students and faculty.

"People are used to having a parking space, and they don't want to give it up," said one faculty member.

"The system is convenient and efficient," said another.

The proposal is currently under review by the University of Iowa Transportation Services Department.

Conflicting reports abound

Patty shrouded in mystery

By ARMIN AMEN

Patty Hearst, the heiress to the Hearst publishing fortune, was kidnapped in 1974 and later became a member of the Symbionese Liberation Army.

On September 5, 1974, Patty Hearst was kidnapped from her Berkeley, California apartment. She was held captive for 44 days and later became a member of the SLA.

"I am not sure what happened to Patty," said one source.

"I have heard conflicting reports," said another.

The investigation culminated in the 1975 arrest of the SLA members.

"We are still trying to understand what happened," said a third source.

Hearst stopped in Iowa

TUESDAY, Sept. 30

The famous heiress, Patty Hearst, was stopped by Iowa Highway Patrol officers in Dubuque, Iowa, on September 30, 1975.

"She was driving a car and was stopped for speeding," said a source.

"She was cooperative and was released without a ticket," said another.

"We are not sure what happened," said a third source.

Herpes killer found

NEW YORK (AP) — A new virus-fighting drug promises to break through a virus that causes blindness and a burning pain in the eye, researchers reported Wednesday.

The virus is herpes simplex, also the cause of "cold sores" that appear on the lips.

When Wapack Type One infected it, one eye can become blind in days, the researchers said. Wapack Type Two is a leading cause of neural damage, especially in women and children. Wapack Type Three is a leading cause of neural damage, especially in men who may become infected during birth.

It's been blamed for a variety of neural illnesses, including painful sores on the skin and nerves.

Among the researchers who are working on the virus is Dr. Ralph Gallo, a virus specialist at the University of California, San Diego.

Gallo's team has found that the virus attaches to nerve cells in the eye and causes an inflammatory reaction.

The researchers also found that the virus stimulates the immune system, which can lead to other infections.

Gallo's work is supported by the National Institutes of Health, which has called the virus "one of the most important infectious diseases in the world."

The researchers said they plan to continue their work and hope to find a treatment for the virus.

The Iowa City Council was scheduled Monday to make a final decision on a decision-making process that will allow for public involvement when the council appoints a new City Manager.

One of the council's primary concerns is that public meetings be scheduled soon and that committee and council meetings be held to give the public an opportunity to discuss issues in detail.

Joyce Giaquinta will present her program "Preservation of the English Language, " which will cover a variety of topics from the origin of the English language to current trends.

In 1967, The Federal Communications Commission (FCC), supported by Congress and the courts, appointed the Fairness Doctrine Advisory Committee (FDAC) to redress the complaints that the broadcast media had approached the treatment of controversial issues in a way that violated the "Public Interest, convenience, or necessity." The result was a vote to extend the Fairness Doctrine to all over-the-air broadcasters and put it into the FCC's code.

What the doctrine essentially did was take the decisions of the FDAC to the level of a court decision and mandate that the FCC ensure that broadcasters would cover controversial issues in a way that was not only fair and balanced, but also diverse and comprehensive. This meant that if a station neglected to cover an important event, or if a certain group was not adequately represented, the FCC would fine them.

Issues and Arguments

One of the issues that arose was the concern about the precedent set by the FDAC's decision. Some argued that the doctrine could lead to censorship and self-censorship, while others argued that it was necessary to ensure that the public was exposed to a wide range of viewpoints.

The doctrine also led to a number of controversies and debates about what types of issues were covered, how they were covered, and who was responsible for ensuring compliance. Many stations and individual broadcasters disputed the fairness doctrine, arguing that it was too broad and too vague to be enforced effectively.

In summary, the Fairness Doctrine was a complex and controversial aspect of the broadcasting industry, with arguments both for its necessity and against its implementation. Its impact and legacy continue to be debated and discussed in the context of broadcast media regulation.

Baseball managers get walking papers

By BILL ROCK

Ike Finken, 72, the manager of the New York Mets, was fired on Monday. Finken had managed the Mets since 1961, but the team has struggled in recent years. The firing came after a poor start to the season, with the Mets currently sitting at the bottom of the National League East.

Finken, who had been with the Mets for 30 years, was a key figure in the team's early success in the 1960s. However, in recent years, the team's performance had declined, and Finken was blamed for not being able to turn things around.

The move was unexpected, and many fans and journalists were shocked by the news. "Ike was a great manager, and he did a lot for the Mets," said one fan. "I don't understand why they fired him.""

Despite the firing, Finken remains highly respected in baseball circles. He will now be available for coaching or consulting opportunities.
