WASHINGTON (AP) - Fraud and abuse in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare programs cost taxpayers "tens of millions of dollars each year," but no one knows exactly how much because of weak policing efforts, an investigator testified Monday.

"During the last five years," said Hawkeye Fred Haberecht, "no more serious deficiencies are being reported by department, because of weak policing efforts, a tiny investigative unit is looking at only two or three different HEW departments at a time."

"The only problem so far as the women's department is concerned is in swimming," said Margaret Fox, chairwoman of the Women's P.E. Department. "We can prove that there's been more fraud, but we can't prove that there's been more theft."

Shades of Shakespeare in River City

By ROGER TIEDEM

There may be a generation gap brewing in the Crestridge Players, Iowa City’s newest theater group, but for right three of the four directors, the generation gap is a non-issue.

On the side stands about two dozen star and quick-witted high school students rolled around a principal of middle-high school drama coach who enrolls 85 of 90 students in the program. This is the week before the school’s annual summer program begins.

Last summer, the theater group produced ‘The Diary of Anne Frank’ and ‘Kiss Me Kate’.

For the past few days, the group has been looking into the show, which will be ‘Two Gentlemen of Verona’.

Currently, the group is looking for male and female performers in the play.

‘Two Gentlemen of Verona’ is a comedy written in 1597 by William Shakespeare and one of his most historical plays.

The story tells of two young men, Petruchio and Proteus, who are both in love with women, Luciana and Silvia, respectively.

The play is about their efforts to win the hearts of their respective lovers and the intricacies of their relationships.

The play opens on June 20th and runs for four weeks.

Tickets are available at the Crestridge Players box office.

Making the world safe

Secret American-sponsored guerrillas in foreign nations may come under closer congressional scrutiny if a piece of legislation which the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is considering becomes law. The legislation, the Arms Export Control Act, would require, according to the Washington Post, "reports to all governments arms sales and credits to foreign countries, and all commercial transactions of major defense items or sales in excess of $10 million." Presently, selling arms abroad may be classified under "national security" as a preventive measure against preventing legislators from questioning the cost, benefits, and long range consequences of such programs. This policy of 'secrecy for the good of the country' has resulted, at various times, in the manufacture of weapons which are used in the battle of the India-Pakistan war and the conflict between Greece and Turkey over Cyprus.

America has led in arming nations around the world for almost 40 years, and has accomplished little in this pantomime of altering people abroad and at home. Secretly, such as that displayed by the Nixon Administration in its handling of the Greek-Pakistani war, has not only nullified the assurance and the action which precipitated the proposal. The Arms Export Control Act will give us a more meaningful security.

Horatio Alger's hooks say, in their folksy and willpower backed by the rich Oriental heritage, 'You are the master of your fate; you are the captain of your soul.' Nobody achieves both success and meaning in life - particularly American life - unless he has that Oriental sense for the welfare of animals. Where I am glad she brought these facts out. But she ignores or calis unimportant the hunter I am glad she brought these facts out. But she ignores or calls unimportant the hunter with the laurels, later.

"Anti-hunters" make 'Huckos' an issue

President Nixon, in an address before the National Wildlife Federation, has brought the issue of hunting back into the public spotlight. But a controversy is brewing among hunters as to whether or not there exists a viable market for hunting in the United States.

The President's address was met with mixed reactions. Some hunters welcomed the move, as it brought attention to a cause that they believed was being neglected. Others, however, were skeptical of Nixon's motives and questioned the usefulness of the speech.

In response, the National Wildlife Federation launched a campaign to promote the benefits of hunting as an activity that can provide economic and social benefits to communities and individuals alike. The campaign emphasized the importance of preserving wildlife habitats and ensuring the long-term sustainability of hunting resources.

As the debate continues, it remains to be seen whether the President's speech will have a lasting impact on the issue of hunting in the United States. While some argue that the speech represents a step forward in promoting the cause, others remain unconvinced of its effectiveness.

Doesn't the President's speech contradict the principles of the National Wildlife Federation? If so, what actions could the Federation take to address the issue?

The National Wildlife Federation could consider conducting outreach efforts to engage hunters and non-hunters alike in discussions about the importance of preserving wildlife habitats. Additionally, they could work to address any concerns or misconceptions that hunting opponents may have about the activity. Through education and communication, the Federation may be able to build support for the cause and achieve its goals.

Do you think the National Wildlife Federation's campaign for hunting is effective? Why or why not?

It is difficult to assess the effectiveness of the National Wildlife Federation's campaign for hunting. While some may support the cause, others remain resistant to the idea of hunting. The Federation will need to continue to engage in discussions and promote the benefits of hunting in order to build support and achieve its goals.

If you were to design a campaign to promote hunting, what strategies would you employ?
Evaporative emissions major air pollutant

By STEVE FREEDMAN

Governing evaporative emissions is one way air polluting cars and trucks can be controlled. The EPA, for example, is working to cut emissions from older cars, which account for more than 90 percent of the nation's emissions.

The EPA has been working to reduce evaporative emissions since 1970, when it imposed new standards for cars and trucks. The new standards would cut evaporative emissions by more than 20 percent for new cars and trucks, and near-identical improvements for older cars.

The agency said that the new standards would reduce evaporative emissions by more than 20 percent for new cars and trucks, and near-identical improvements for older cars.

The new standards for evaporative emissions are part of the agency's overall plan to reduce air pollution from cars and trucks. The plan includes new standards for nitrogen oxides, sulfur dioxide, and carbon monoxide, as well as a comprehensive program to reduce emissions from power plants and industrial sources.

Detroit began the first stage of a multi-school integrated education program without incident, but the struggle for equal treatment continues in Boston with rioting demonstrations at two schools.

In Pittsburgh, meanwhile, teachers voted on a contract yesterday and the city's Board of Education will meet today to consider a teachers' strike.

The students in Detroit are attending regular school classes and are not planning to hold any demonstrations or pickets. The city's Board of Education has released a statement saying that the city's schools will continue to operate normally.

Is there anyone that hasn't at one time or another been fascinated by the prospect of devising the world's first perpetual motion machine? Occasionaliy, someone appears to have nearly succeeded. Unfortunately, the result is always the same. Without a continual reinvestment of resources, nothing can operate indefinitely. The same principle applies to saving: If you go to the well too often, you eventually exhaust your resources. But, by a steady program of adding to existing reserves, an ever-expanding reservoir for the future is achieved.
