Almost 5 per cent

Dorm capacity to be cut

By K. PATRICK JENSEN
Asst. News Editor

UI administrators confirmed Thursday the existence of a new policy which limits the number of dormitory residents this fall—a reversal of the present policy of housing all students who apply for UI dormitory housing.

Mitchel Livingston, director of dormitory services, said Thursday the number of permanent dormitory residents will be held at 5,573 next fall, about a 230-person drop from the permanent dormitory spaces this year. In addition, Livingston said the number of temporary spaces will be limited to about 480 persons, approximately the same as the peak number of students in temporary spaces last fall.

The new policy is a reversal of the present housing policy created by William Shanhouse, UI vice president for administrative services.

In a Sept. 3, 1975 statement, Shanhouse said, "Any student who wants a University of Iowa education should have access to that education, but the university realizes the lack of safe suitable housing could be an impediment."

"As a result, current policy is that any student who wants housing is offered dormitory housing, under either permanent or (if need be) temporary contract."

Contacted Thursday night, Shanhouse declined comment on questions about the new policy. "They (answers to Daily Iowan questions) will be in a statement on the entire situation tomorrow morning," Shanhouse said Thursday night.

Livingston labeled the new policy a "major breakthrough" Thursday afternoon since under the new policy, the number of residents in some rooms will be reduced.

Livingston explained that currently there are about 100 doubles in Currier Hall dormitory which are being used as triples. Under the new policy, Livingston said, the university will be able to "set up doubles as doubles and triples as triples."

Livingston said it is difficult to predict the number of students who will be turned away from the dormitories. "There will be a small percentage we'll have to say, 'We won't have any housing immediately available for you,'" Livingston said.

Transfer upperclass students will have the most difficult time obtaining dormitory housing, Livingston said. The university will guarantee a permanent dormitory space for all freshmen and sophomores under the pariatal rule, he said.

The university has also "established a procedure to accommodate international students who are in a sense penalized in terms of lateness," he said. Foreign students will be housed within the dormitories so they can be assigned permanent spaces."

Livingston said upperclass students or graduates who are already in dormitories and have reapplied for next fall within the preference period granted them will be in "pretty good shape."

He said that normal attrition should allow upperclass dormitory residents a space next fall.

Livingston said that June Davis, UI coordinator of residence information, will try to place students who are unable to find dormitory space either through the rent-for-services program or other off-campus housing.

The administration decided on the new dormitory policy after changing from a two-year dormitory budget originally proposed by Shanhouse to a one-year budget which was approved by the State Board of Regents at its March meeting, according to Livingston.

Livingston explained that the two-year budget used as a base the 5,800 permanent spaces for dormitories. However, because of problems with meeting building bond obligations under the two-year plan, it was dropped and the one-year budget adopted.

Under the one-year plan, Livingston said, the administration needed less students to balance the budget and decided to cut back the number of permanent spaces to 5,573.

The new policy should also lessen some pressures on dormitory students, according to Phillip Hubbard, vice president for student affairs. Hubbard mentioned the new policy at a public meeting on suicides last Sunday in response to a question from a minister about dormitory overcrowding.

"It's a change in philosophy," Hubbard said Thursday, "because we feel it is bad policy to overcrowd the students so much so we won't do it anymore."

Steve Lombardi, A3, chairperson of the Associated Residence Halls (ARH) housing committee, said Thursday that ARH has pushed for a reduction in the number of students in some dormitory rooms and a reduction of the number of temporarily housed students.

Lombardi said he and some other ARH members learned of the plan in an "informal meeting" with Livingston about three weeks ago, after the regents adopted the one-year dormitory budget.

He blamed ARH for the lack of publicity on the new policy. "It's probably a breakdown on our part. It probably should have been said by us because they told us that," he said.

The new policy is "something that Mitchel Livingston has tried to pressure them into," Lombardi said.

"Temporary housing is a good thing but it only expands so far and it's bad," he continued. "They've probably become aware they've reached their capacity."

UI pay vouchers forged twice

By LARRY PERL
Staff Writer

The UI Department of Transportation and Security (DTS) is investigating the forgery of two salary-advance vouchers for UI employees in the last two weeks.

Two different names and social security numbers, both fictitious, were used on the voucher forms. The signature of the payroll department supervisor who authorized the salary advances was forged.

Officials at the cashier's office said that another such forgery was attempted Wednesday when an unidentified man stepped up to a cashier's window in Jessup Hall and handed her a voucher form, supposedly processed by the payroll department.

According to University Cashier Don Ross and Asst. Controller Cliff Trindle, the cashier became suspicious because the authorizing signature on the form was that of a payroll department supervisor who did not usually sign such forms. The form also looked odd because it was typed, and such forms are usually filled out by hand.

The cashier reached for a phone, at which the point the man asked her what she was doing. The cashier said she wanted to check on the form. The man then grabbed it from her hand and ran away, according to Trindle.

Ross and Trindle said the forgeries are a very unusual occurrence. "This is the first forgery I've run into in 16 years here," Ross said.

They said the voucher form is used for various purposes. In the case of a new employee whose first paycheck is not issued due to an administrative slip-up, an official from the cashier's office will notify the payroll department that a slip-up has occurred. A voucher will be written up, authorizing a salary advance for the employee.

Other instances in which the form is used are when an employee has lost a paycheck, or an employee is resigning from the University.

"Somebody got hold of one of those forms in an unauthorized manner and Xeroxed it," Ross said.

Ross and Trindle did not rule out the possibility of future forgeries, but said the forgers "will have to know more than they do now." They said new procedures for the forms are being instituted, but would not say what those procedures are. "We don't want these people figuring out a way to get around the new procedures (should such information be printed)," Ross said.

Ross said the forms are issued to the payroll office. "They're not just laying around," he said.

Lt. Merlyn Moore of DTS, who is investigating the forgeries, said he has no leads, but he may have "several suspects, perhaps."

"All we can do is try to match the writing (on the vouchers that have already slipped through) with an individual," he said.

Moore said the writing on the two vouchers was similar, but not the same. "When you try to forge someone's name, it's not going to come out exactly the same twice," he said.

And he added, "This is the first forgery of this type I've seen. It's a pioneer in its way."

'Half the globe utopia-less' 'World peace and justice a must'

By TOM COLLINS
Staff Writer

"You don't have to wait until the 1980s to see the lack of utopia that will exist in the world," Saul Mendlovitz told a sparse Shambaugh Auditorium audience last night, "because it exists right now for 50 per cent of the people of the globe."

Mendlovitz, international law professor at Rutgers University in Newark, N.J., told his audience that a movement for global peace, justice and unity must be accepted, or else "the world will almost certainly be destroyed."

"Almost anyone these days will tell you that the world is going through rapid social transformation," said Mendlovitz. "But the type of change is very important, because change has always occurred."

He explained that the world is presently going through a 10,000 year change with which he particularly agrees. He cited the profound, but gradual transfer from hunting to an agricultural system, which caused people to settle in one place.

"We must now attend to the process of inter-penetration on a global scale," said Mendlovitz. "We are creating a new social order, with people attempting to join together in a common solidarity."

Four ideologies cited by Mendlovitz in response to this change in the social system were: managerial, confrontational, self-reliant and populist.

"The managerial ideology consists of business, professional and intellectual people, who believe that global problems such as pollution, arms escalation and food depletion, must be faced by all nations," said Mendlovitz, "but business organizations would handle the solutions."

Mendlovitz said the managerial solution is not viable because the wealth and power of the world would still be in the hands of the wealthy and powerful.

The second ideological solution he offered was the confrontational belief of third world governing elites who wish to solve their own problems and who view confrontation as the only answer to removing outside control. Mendlovitz remarked that "confrontation only leads to confrontation."

Self-reliance, the third ideology, began with Mao Tse Tung, according to Mendlovitz, when 700 million people found they could feed themselves without outside interference. Mendlovitz said he believes self-reliance will become a viable political process in 1976, with people trying to become more independent.

The populist ideology is the most agreeable to Mendlovitz, who said "we have to start behaving to the rest of humanity as if they were part of us." He added that people have to "incorporate political, social and economic ideologies on a global level."

The politics for the 1980s was seen as some sort of "mini-catastrophe," Mendlovitz said there will be an arms escalation with populations who have outstripped their environmental resources.

"I foresee the situation in the 1980s as being five to 10 times worse than World War II," said Mendlovitz. "The likelihood of a holocaust occurring in that time is very great."

But Mendlovitz, who promised not to leave the audience with a negative outlook for the future, said "in thinking about the 1980s, one must also think about projects which will bring about effective systems change."

Projects mentioned by Mendlovitz were those which would be operational for the "lowest core of humanity, not those with any self-interest motives: projects which demonstrate the difficulty of using nation-state systems as a way of solving global problems; projects which have only a one in 5 per cent chance of making it, because the more the likelihood of success, the better the chance that it will be systems-controlled, and as a result, very uninteresting."

With these three project goals in mind, Mendlovitz said "we can begin to mobilize a small segment of the population." He added that some of the ways to begin to mobilize people are: to demand a constitutional amendment for direct election of the United Nations representative; to cut $15 billion annually for the next three years from the defense budget; and to transfer all taxes used for defense into dollars for the world food programs.

Mendlovitz concluded that the terms "local" and "global" must be redefined by people to "reflect where they're at in the world." He added that he hopes "by 1980 there will be candidates running for office with global issues on their minds."

Mendlovitz's presentation included no viable solutions for present world problems, and no alternatives for the social, political and economic strife that exists between nations.

Mendlovitz said he is optimistic that conflicting nations will find peace through a global peace movement, but did not suggest how this might be accomplished.

Boyd nominates Hines as law dean

By MARY SCHNACK
Staff Writer

UI Pres. Willard Boyd will recommend law school Prof. William Hines to be appointed as the new College of Law dean at today's state Board of Regents meeting, The Daily Iowan learned Thursday.

Celeste Bremer, L2, president of the Iowa Student Bar Association, said Hines' name was announced to the Faculty Dean Search Committee and Student Parallel Committee Wednesday.

Law School Prof. William Buss, chairperson of the faculty committee, and Law School Prof. Mark Schantz, a member of the faculty committee, would not confirm Hines' recommendation before it becomes official today.

Hines would not confirm that he will be recommended. However, when asked if he would deny the statement, he said, "No, I wouldn't want to tell you an untruth."

But there was some dissension among students over Hines' selection. The Student Parallel Committee consists of nine law students selected to interview—and review the credentials of—dean candidates. The student committee could only make recommendations to the faculty committee: it was not allowed to vote on candidates.

Bremer, a member of the student committee, said the field of candidates was narrowed to four, and the student committee recommended that two others be considered over Hines. According to Bremer, "If Hines was who the faculty thought they wanted, the students unanimously decided to recommend that maybe they (the faculty) should look around some more." Bremer said a similar recommendation was made for the fourth candidate.

"Our vote didn't mean anything," Bremer said. "But some people were in favor of Hines; he is not unrespected."

Bremer characterized the reaction of law students to Hines' selection: "It's okay, but it's not ecstatic, but not severely opposed, either," Bremer said.

Bremer said she felt that the student committee did have an effect. "They (the faculty) did seriously consider our serious objections," she said. "But they thought it (the dean selection) was their basic responsibility." Bremer added that most students accepted it as "the way the system works."

Strikers accommodate First Lady

NEW YORK (AP) — First Lady Betty Ford used an entrance cleared of striking NBC technicians by court order Thursday night to enter a theater for taping of a TV special honoring her and nine other women.

Shortly before Ms. Ford arrived at the theater for the "Women of the Year" show, a judge ordered the strikers to stop picketing two of the building's three entrances.

But before that order was issued, some celebrities crossed picket lines to get into the theater and present the awards. They included actresses Marlo Thomas and Cicely Tyson, singer Pearl Bailey and tennis star Billie Jean King.

Gov. Ella Grasso of Connecticut, one of the award recipients, did not attend the show, saying she did not want to cross the picket line.

The pickets were members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians and members of other labor unions acting in sympathy.

The strike began a week ago after contract talks broke down between NBC and the union. Negotiations resumed Thursday in Washington. The union has rejected an offer of a 5 per cent raise in the average weekly wage of $375.

The 90-minute program, scheduled for broadcast by NBC at 10:30 p.m. CST, was to have aired live. But in a last-minute switch, NBC said it was taping the show 2½ hours earlier for broadcast Thursday.

Weather

Sunny skies today with anticipated precipitation tonight, and severe down-pours hitting the C.O.D. But with temperatures reaching the high 60s and low 70s, a drought on Iowa Avenue has been predicted for 2 a.m. Sunday and continuing throughout the year, leaving launderers steaming.

Butz-Callaway link

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate investigator Thursday linked Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz with efforts by Howard H. Callaway to persuade the Forest Service to approve an expansion of his Colorado ski resort onto nearby federal land.

Butz has denied any involvement with the Callaway ski resort matter. Owen Malone, chief investigator for the Senate Interior Committee, said a note which appears to be in Butz' handwriting was found written on an Interior dept. memo urging that the Forest Service be encouraged to take action that would pave the way for the proposed expansion of Callaway's Crested Butte ski resort.

The Agriculture dept. is the parent agency of the Forest Service. Malone was the leadoff witness as an Interior subcommittee began hearings into Callaway's actions. Callaway, a former Army secretary, resigned as President Ford's campaign manager after published reports that he had met in his Pentagon office last July 3 with top Forest Service and Agriculture dept. officials to argue for expanding his resort onto nearby federally owned Snodgrass Mountain. A tentative decision had been made by local Forest Service officials to oppose immediate expansion. But 5 1/2 months after the meeting in Callaway's office, the service tentatively approved the expansion proposal, reversing the position taken by the lower-level officials.

No Quinlan appeal

DENVILLE, N.J. (AP) — Karen Anne Quinlan's mother said today that her daughter's doctors will not appeal a New Jersey

Supreme Court ruling that would allow the comatose young woman's parents to have her life-support system disconnected. "I spoke to Mr. (Paul) Armstrong this morning and he told me the doctors are not going to appeal," said Julia Quinlan. Armstrong, the Quinlan family attorney, and Ralph Porzio, attorney for Karen Quinlan's doctors, were not immediately available for comment.

A doctors' decision not to appeal would leave all parties in the case on record as accepting the landmark decision, clearing the way for shutting off the respirator that is keeping Quinlan alive.

The 21-member board of trustees at St. Clare's Hospital here voted unanimously early today after lengthy discussion with its attorney not to appeal the ruling, according to a spokesperson for Lawrence Stern, who represents the board.

Rampage in Rome

ROME (AP) — Extremists hurling fire bombs rampaged through downtown Rome on Thursday, attacking government offices, police stations and Christian Democratic party offices. The violence heightened tensions caused by Italy's political and economic turmoil.

In Milan, another in a series of fires believed set by arsonists heavily damaged the Motta Candy Co. factory and put 3,000 employees out of work. Strikes for higher pay by one million construction workers and airport employees added to the country's economic woes.

Police said an estimated 3,000 leftist extremists threw at least 20 fire bombs at the headquarters of the ruling Christian Democrats and at the Justice Ministry, injuring a police officer and a passerby. No serious damage was reported.

They were protesting the death of a youth shot down during another fire bomb attack on the Justice Ministry Wednesday night, police said.

The parents of the victim, 20-year-old Mario Salvi, said their son was an innocent passerby. Police said he had a loaded pistol in his pocket and was fleeing with two other youths after the attack.

The youths fled through narrow streets and alleys after Thursday's attack on the Justice Ministry.

Judge stops beating

BOSTON (AP) — A 66-year-old judge chased down four white men he saw beating a black man and later obtained arrest warrants for them. "I wanted black people to know there are white people who do care," he said.

Municipal Court Judge A. Frank Foster said he especially wanted to intervene in the beating he witnessed because of an incident Monday in which a black lawyer was attacked by a gang of white teenagers after an antibusing demonstration at City Hall.

He was referring to the beating of lawyer Theodore C. Landsmark, 29, executive director of the Contractors Association of Boston, the latest in a series of racial incidents in this city troubled by a busing controversy.

Landsmark was attacked by white youths beneath the office of Mayor Kevin H. White. One of the assailants used a staff bearing an American flag in the attack that left Landsmark with a broken nose, cuts and bruises.

Foster said he was driving past Boston Common the day after Landsmark was beaten when he saw four whites attack a black man.

Harris 'still in'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former Oklahoma Sen. Fred Harris withdrew as a contender Thursday in the remaining Democratic presidential primary elections.

Harris declined to throw his support to any other Democrat and said he would remain a declared candidate through the Democratic National Convention in New York in July.

"I am still a candidate for President of the United States," Harris told a crowded rally and news conference. "But our national effort in the primaries ends today."

Harris said by not emerging as one of the frontrunners in the early primaries, he was denied the chance of getting his campaign theme of economic concentration before enough Americans.

Regents support delay in Old Brick demolition

By R.C. BRANDAU
Staff Writer

The state Board of Regents agreed Thursday to support delaying destruction of the old First Presbyterian Church while the group, Friends of Old Brick, attempt to raise the $140,000 necessary to purchase the building.

In January 1974 the regents bid that amount for the land on which the structure rests stipulating that the building would have been demolished when they acquired ownership this May 1. The cleared site would be incorporated into the UI campus as green space.

According to Emil Trott, president of Friends of Old Brick, to obtain the proposed 2 1/2 month delay the regents must go to the Iowa City Presbyterians and ask for an extension on the contract.

James Harris, UI professor of Urban and Regional Planning, said, "The Presbyterian group are in the legal position to demolish the building whenever they want. They do not have to grant the extension."

Friends of Old Brick first proposed to the regents Wednesday that the regents purchase the land on which the church stands, but allow Friends of Old Brick to buy the church for $1.

After more than four hours of debate, the regents denied the request. According to Abigail Van Allen of Friends of Old Brick, the regents did not want to get into the business of paying for historical buildings when its real business is education.

She added, "They felt that they could not justify the purchase of an old building. They also want to own 100 per cent of the property in the block."

The extension would expire July 1. The regents are considering purchasing the church and grounds and selling it to Friends of Old Brick on a long-term installment basis, according to Trott.

Trott claimed that if this were to happen the group would have a better chance of raising the money because they could apply to foundations and seek commercial loans.

"We're just raising money on a dream right now and nothing concrete," he said.

Trott said his organization would place money in an escrow account to pay for the building's future demolition if plans for its preservation do not work out.

Van Allen told the regents that Iowa City "had lost much of its heritage through urban renewal" and that "all of us are trustees of our cultural environment."

"If a precedent is set, let it be to preserve rather than to destroy a cultural landmark," she said.

Jubilant throng hails new Chinese premier

TOKYO (AP) — An estimated 100,000 Chinese waving banners, singing revolutionary songs and beating gongs, cymbals and drums, marched around Peking's Tien An Men Square on Thursday hailing the appointment of Hua Kuo-feng as premier and condemning ousted Teng Hsiao-ping, Japanese news dispatches from Peking reported.

The official Hsinhua news agency said the latest shifts in the hierarchy were endorsed by "several million" jubilant citizens in all parts of the country, including Chinese guards facing the Soviets along the frontier in Sinkiang, thousands of miles from Peking.

The speedy appointment of Hua, 56, as premier and party first vice chairman on Mao's proposal Wednesday, makes him the No. 2 man in China's ruling hierarchy.

Teng, 72, the target of several weeks of harsh criticism as "the unrepentant capitalist roader," was stripped of all his party and government posts, including party vice chairman, government vice premier and armed forces chief of staff, on Mao's orders.

But neither official Peking broadcasts monitored in Tokyo nor Japanese news reports from Peking have reported Teng's whereabouts.

The speedy appointment of Hua, 56, as premier and party first vice chairman on Mao's proposal Wednesday, makes

Making the show go

Hancher 'tech': backstage stars

By JEAN BOLLHOEFER
Staff Writer

Directors direct and conductors conduct, but when the house lights dim and the curtain goes up in Hancher auditorium, "Tech" takes over.

"Tech" is theater jargon for the stage manager and crews who are working backstage to help put on the UI's spring opera, The Love For Three Oranges. Some crews are assigned to prepare the set, property design and construction; some take care of costume design and construction, and others are responsible for the make-up design prior to opening the show. Still others operate stage, sound and lights during the production. This is not a hit-and-miss business, but requires split-second timing.

Tech crews are directly responsible to stage manager Rick Loula, G. It is his job to coordinate all the elements into a production. He cues entrances, exits and disappearances through the trap door, and sets off the opera's two explosions.

"Actors and Tech must work together to put on the opera. But someone backstage has to be responsible for calling the shots," Loula said.

Although the orchestra is not technically "Tech," Loula thinks conductor James Dixon, UI music professor, is equally important. "Dixon interprets it, Sam Kirkpatrick (asst. prof. of speech and dramatic art) designs it and I turn the pages," Loula said calmly.

The serious design work began last October. When asked what time period the costumes reflect, Kirkpatrick said, "Middle Fairy Tale."

His assistant, Tom Schwinn, G, said the 36-foot, $500 China silk sail above the set and the serpents on top of six huge banners were special parts of the set. Schwinn said adapting Kirkpatrick's plans to a larger scale was a real task for Technical Director Tim Kupka, a teaching assistant in the dramatic art dept.

Kupka said he spent about three weeks in converting design plans to blueprints and about six weeks in construction. He was also instrumental in helping prop designer Penny Hall, G, to make the numerous props used in the play.

Construction of the scenery, props and costumes required about 3,000 person-hours, Kupka said. "And that doesn't even include the planning time in preparation for the actual work. The total budget for materials and overhead was $8,000; but if you counted time put in by students, you'd be talking Broadway budgets."

Not only must the students work long and hard, they must also work quickly. Of the 80 costumes in the show, 50 were designed and made in a nine-week period, and many of the "luxurious" materials were purchased in New York.

"There are no patterns for these creations, so we (under the supervision of Margaret Hall) make our own," says Bonnie Jenkins, the costume shop supervisor. "We've used hundreds of yards of cloth. The Witch's costume alone has 45 yards of fabric in the skirt." (Hall is director of costume design, and assoc. prof. of the speech and dramatic art dept.)

But the costumes will not work without proper make-up. Make-up Director Allen Pellenberg, G, sets a 5:15 call for lead characters, and the whole cast is done by 7:15. Ten people supervise, while most of the cast members make up their own faces. But the Witch, who appears yellow-green on stage, and the Wizard, who appears pale-green, must be made up by the crew to achieve a perfect "bizarre" quality.

"When we finish with the Witch, you don't know if it's a face or a monster," says Pellenberg, who estimates the total cost of cosmetics to be $500.

But what good is any design if it can't be seen? So Dr. David Thayer, director of technical theater, makes things visible, creates scenery and focuses attention within a scene by the use of his lights. One board operator (at the lighting controls), three follow spot persons (with spot-lights) and two projectionists help Thayer create scenes like the fight of the Witch and the Wizard. "Even lights are in conflict," says Thayer, who is a professor of speech and dramatic art.

Ted Wentink, A1, takes care of the sound. Via closed-circuit television, Dixon is able to conduct a backstage orchestra as well as the one in the pit.

Audiences of "Orange" won't know all the long hours and hard work that went into its preparation. They'll see the effects and acting; they'll hear the orchestra and voices. And when the audience applauds at the end, the 79-member cast will take its bow.

But the "Tech" crew members will have the last word. They'll drop the curtain.

Iowans to choose Democrat delegates

By K. PATRICK JENSEN
Asst. News Editor

Iowa Democrats will gather in the state's six Congressional districts Saturday to elect 40 delegates to the Democratic National Convention and conduct party business.

Democrats from the First Congressional District, which includes Johnson County, will convene at the St. Ambrose College Fine Arts Center in Davenport at 10 a.m. to elect six national convention delegates and four alternates.

The Democratic National Convention is July 12 in New York City.

In all, 40 of the states' 47 national convention delegates and 29 of the 34 alternates will be chosen Saturday. The remaining seven delegates and five alternates will be elected at the state convention May 29 at Veterans Auditorium in Des Moines.

Carter makes apology for 'ethnic purity'

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jimmy Carter, under fresh attack by President Ford who said Carter is too vague on the issues, publicly apologized on Thursday for using the phrase "ethnic purity" in opposing federal efforts to artificially change the character of neighborhoods.

In Washington, meanwhile, former Sen. Fred Harris of Oklahoma announced he would withdraw from national campaigning for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I am still a candidate for president. But our national effort in the primaries ends today," Harris told a news conference.

Carter, in apologizing for his ethnic purity remark, said: "It was a very serious mistake on my part." He spoke at a news conference as he and his two chief opponents, Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona and Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, campaigned separately in Pennsylvania for the state's April 27 primary.

Specifically, the words Carter called "unfortunate" and "carelessly used" were "ethnic purity (and) the intrusion of alien groups."

The issue surfaced the former Georgia governor made this comment Tuesday in South Bend, Ind.:

"I'm not trying to say I want to maintain with any kind of government interference the ethnic purity of neighborhoods... What I say is the government ought not take as a major purpose the intrusion of alien groups into a neighborhood, simply to establish that intrusion."

Udall, also speaking to reporters in Philadelphia, said Carter's apology shows "some of his attitudes" in a possibly racial matter.

Udall said Carter "might have made the statement" to win the support of followers of Alabama Gov. George Wallace who also is on the Pennsylvania ballot but reportedly plans to do little campaigning for the state's 178 delegates of which 134 will be chosen at the primary.

Moines.

Kathy Krueger, chairperson of the first district arrangements committee, said that 491 delegates will convene Saturday.

Johnson County will have 78 delegates at the convention. It will have the second largest county delegation for the district, behind Scott County's 134 delegates. Davenport is in Scott County.

The delegates will also pass a district platform, choose members for state convention committees and elect four district committee members to the Democratic State Central Committee.

Each district will also choose a person to cast an electoral college vote for the Democratic candidate who wins a plurality vote in Iowa in November.

Delegates attending the district convention will also attend the state convention in Des Moines.

Fooled, for sure

"Humanists" in the audience should be smug today. The election predictions were wrong, for the first memorable time since the Truman-Dewey election in 1948. People, it will be pointed out, can't always be predicted.

Wednesday's newspapers and most of Tuesday night's TV said that Rep. Morris Udall, D-Ariz., had won the Wisconsin primary. ABC, NBC, the Associated Press and virtually all news organizations had agreed that Udall was the winner over Jimmy Carter — a win Udall badly needed to bolster his sagging fund-raising efforts. Only CBS had said the election was too close to call.

But when the returns were in Wednesday, Carter was the winner — by 1 per cent over Udall. Consensus is that the "key precincts" used to sample the state and forecast the winner did indeed show Udall the narrow victor. But the rural precincts, where the voting was done on paper ballots (and thus took longer to count), went for Carter enough to turn around the election.

All of which hopefully will make a few more people skeptical enough to question polls a bit, not to accept them blindly. Each poll has an error margin — though the major polling organizations like Gallup are making that margin narrower and narrower. But the error possibility is there — and it should not be overlooked just to "give the people an answer." If that answer doesn't exist yet, the forecasters must say so. The people can take suspense for a few more hours. And that suspense does make elections a bit more exciting, after all.

Mass Comm inadequate?

TO THE EDITOR:

The University of Iowa Mass Communications Laboratory is a very good idea, but the instructors have not been able to put theory into orderly practice. The idea for organization is sound — four levels of study in mass communications.

However, there is a concerted lack of organization within the curriculum and a too-narrow presentation of mass comm.

The program seems simply unorganized to the observer. There seems to be no faculty control of the students and it appears the instructors have turned the students loose with no guidance. I can only make this criticism from what I see within the Mass Comm Lab I, where the teachers, to some extent, impart a perception that they are incompetents and really do not understand the program and their role in it....

In addition ... it seems that the curriculum has changed for the worse between last semester and this semester.

Granted there were some curriculum problems last semester, but I believe that it would have been beneficial to maintain the same sort of lecture format in addition to evaluations of upperclass Mass Comm student projects. I favor turning it back into a separate three-hour class. A good program would include both phases of study — theory and practice. The theory portion was left out and I find it difficult to understand what criteria should be used and how to determine whether the media productions met these.

The program was also supposed to be an introduction to mass communications as a course of study. In reality there was just a system where you came to class on Wednesdays and evaluated media productions done by second, third and fourth year Mass Comm students....

The curriculum within the so-called Mass Comm Lab is much too narrow. This Journalism School seems prejudiced against the broadcast media when in American society today that is the most important form of journalism. That sector of mass comm is minimally discussed in 19:109 (Introduction to Journalism, Mass Communication and Communication), and the rest of the Journalism School. It should be an integral part of the course and either should be included within the Mass Comm sequence or should have a sequence of its own. Without broadcasting the Journalism School becomes no more than a technical school for newspaper writers and those interested in the technical aspects of certain types of media production. This is hardly complete enough for a Big 10 Journalism School. In addition, the field of public relations has not been developed to the extent it should within the Journalism School....

This course (19:109) makes a person ask whether this program is really worth getting into. It'd give me the kind of education I want?

Mayor 'unconvinced'

TO THE EDITOR:

Revenue sharing has become a political football in eastern Iowa by virtue of the fact that Rep. Mezvinsky sits on the House Subcommittee which has jurisdiction over the matter. Mezvinsky says he's a strong proponent of revenue sharing and would only like to assure greater Congressional accountability. I'd like to take issue with him on several points.

— Mezvinsky says he supported "full" funding for the program. In fact, he voted for "partial funding." The current program and the administration's request for renewal include a $150 million yearly add-on provision, or approximately a 2 1/2 per cent inflation escalation rider. Mezvinsky voted against this provision. This amounts to reducing federal funding obligations $1.3 billion over the 3 1/2 years the subcommittee recommended to authorize for the program. Ironically, last summer our congressperson voted a full cost-of-living adjustment to be made every year in his own salary, without further congressional voting accountability. The contrast in his spending priorities is evident.

— Mezvinsky says he favors communities using revenue sharing funds for "people" programs instead of capital improvement programs. However, no municipality is going to launch a series of service-oriented "people" programs if the funds aren't committed for a substantial period of time. The one year commitment he supported in committee is not long enough. Nor is the two year compromise he says the chairperson of the House Appropriation Committee favors. As local officials we simply can't be expected to walk out on a limb and have Congress chop from behind. They win. We lose.

One of the issues at all levels of government is whether elected officials mean what they say. I believe our congressperson badly misrepresented his position as being favorable to a strong revenue sharing extension. I was recently in Washington to witness several of the key votes. I couldn't have been more surprised or disappointed. Mezvinsky simply did not vote the way I had been led to expect he would. I have read with care the subsequent justifications he has given for his votes. I'm not convinced.

Dance band 'neglected'

TO THE EDITOR:

As a member of one of the three bands that volunteered their services to the Muscular Dystrophy Dance Marathon, I am dismayed by the total negligence of KRNA's Robbie Norton to acknowledge Saturday night the gratuitous contributions of the bands (while making no small point of KRNA's services), and by the similar oversight of Larry Perl in his April 5 Daily Iowan article. Our band, Blake Street, played for two periods during the danceathon and would normally have received roughly $400 for that time. It would seem that our contributions to the cause of Muscular Dystrophy would merit at least token acknowledgement.

Ban the bomber

TO THE EDITOR:

The time for decision on the B-1 bomber is closer than we think. According to a report from the American Friends Service Committee, a vote in the House may occur by April 9, if not earlier.

Sen. Proxmire has called the B-1 "a public works project for the aerospace industry, rather than a needed weapon for defense of the United States." It is expensive and inflationary, providing super-profits to corporations of the military-industrial complex. Like the SST, it would pose a major threat to the environment. It might be used against developing countries in future Vietnam-type wars.

Why not use the energy and wealth now controlled by the Pentagon and giant corporations to meet pressing human needs? There is no major technical difficulty in conversion of factories from military to civilian production, and the same amount of money would provide more jobs. Conversion was done on a massive scale after World War II. It has recently been done successfully, for example, by Boeing Vertol plant near Philadelphia, which built helicopters during the Vietnam War and now is making mass transit cars. The MIT Fluid Mechanics Lab converted from work on nuclear explosions, missiles and jet planes to research on heart disease, air pollution, and oil spills....

The military-industrial complex exerts powerful influence to prevent economic conversion. It finds its own profits and power increased by the arms race. The New York Times describes its operation as a system of "musical chairs in business and government." Corporate managers and Pentagon officials are hired back and forth from industry to government and thus help coordinate the common interests of these giant institutions.

The B-1 bomber is only one aspect of the stranglehold the military industrial complex has on our economy. But it is the current opportunity for us to say, "no," and to take charge of our destiny.

Rep. Ed Mezvinsky has said he intends to vote against the B-1, as he has on every past opportunity. We can encourage him in this stand and in other action to promote peace conversion. Let him and Washington know we don't want the B-1.

—Friday, April 9, 1976, Vol. 108, No. 183—

Keeble was wandering through the many and varied halls of academe, counting the squeaking floorboards, when she came upon her mentor, Sergei Fenelon, Prof. (full). The diminutive yet definitive professor was lying on the floor, stretched to his full 5 ft. 2 in. She had stepped on what she took to be his misdeed.

"Excuse me," she said, tripping. "I didn't know that you were prone to this sort of thing."

"Arrg," he replied, clutching what was definitely, she could now see, his misdeed.

When the confusion died down, as it is wont to do on most occasions — though she could remember once, at a party, when the confusion died up, throwing almost everyone into the middle phase of tertiary schizophrenia and giving the rest an advanced dose of overt somnambulism — when the confusion died down, and they were sitting next to each other on the floor, she asked him what he was doing.

"Ach," he said, falling into a German accent, "I'm looking for my lost pages."

"What pages could you possibly find on the floor?" Keeble asked, scanning the horizons. "And what's with the Teutonic mimicry? Trying to get a government grant?"

"Ah, so many questions, so early in the day. What would the British think?" the professor said, climbing back into his normal Iowa nasality. "First things first, as someone once said — someone who was probably planning on not doing anything in particular."

"I am, or was, crawling around on the floor in search of the missing pages to the most recent episode of my latest classic: 'Filial Devotion and Wanderlust — Part III. The Ithaca Connection."

"I think tenure is finally getting to you," Keeble said slowly, trying to be discreet. "I don't see any pages anywhere."

Fenelon took out a semi-battered pipe and began to fill it in his best professional manner. When the bowl was brimming with tobacco, he stared into it as if it were in a somewhat miraculous communication with Delphi.

"Ah, but what you don't realize," he said, staring, "is that this book is a part of that great series of microfilm classics, called Great Microfilm Classics. When this series is finished, everyone, literate or not, will be able to have all the greats: 'The Odyssey,' 'Paradise Lost,' 'The Inferno,' 'Pilgrim's Progress,' 'Tom Jones,' 'Ross and Tom' — all of these and more will take up only one-eighth of an average bookshelf. Once again, modern technology will triumph over the harsh demands of art."

"That sounds like a novel idea," Keeble said. "I only hope it turns out better than the computer-written sonnets."

The professor had finished staring into the bowl and was now attempting to light the pipe with his Cricket. Keeble started to say something, but he shushed her with a wave of his pipe hand, spilling some tobacco.

"Shh," he muttered under the stem, "I'm trying for my 1,001 lights off this thing."

When the attempt failed, as will all attempts involving the triumph of art over the harsh demands of technology, Fenelon sat back with a sigh of despair, dropping the defunct lighter and the as-yet cold pipe by his side. Keeble wanted to ask what it was that was troubling him, but she couldn't think of a delicate way to put it, so they sat in silence. Finally, after a period of quiet in which she could swear that she had heard the termites launch a frontal attack on the floorboard under her ass, fail, then regroup for a flank movement, she asked, "What's troubling you, professor?"

"Ach, I only wish something would go right," he replied in his anguish, unable to communicate in his native accent.

He paused and tried to straighten up against the wall. When he resumed talking, he had gained some control and spoke normally.

"It all started with this students grading the professors thing. It sounded like such a great idea at the time, much like the idea of teaching students to write by having them imitate their favorite authors." He poked up his pipe and borrowed a match. "But I could see the many failings of that idea when all the students' papers sounded like early, very early, Vonniegut. If I ever see the phrase 'And so it goes,' on one more thesis, I think that I shall go berserk."

He turned to borrow another match. "And so it has been with the grading of the professors idea. Do you realize how impossibly tough some of those students are in grading? Do you have any idea how much work some students expect? Demand? And any complaints are received with an indifferent smirk. If you really desire to grasp the knowledge," they say, "You must work at it. Nothing comes easy in this world." No compassion, no sensitivity to the stresses put on me by such a system. I just can't help but feel there's a much better way to run an educational system."

"But surely it can't be all that bad," Keeble said, not knowing what to say.

"Not that bad!" Fenelon threw his head back and laughed a hollow exhausted laugh. When his head rebounded off the wall, he continued.

"Listen, I'm afraid I'm going to get a B from my Core Lit class. After all the strenuous effort I've put into that class, I think the little bastards are going to give me a B. And two weeks from now I come up before the Advancement Committee for a raise. Advancement Committees don't give raises to professors who get Bs. I received a B last semester from those dolts in my Approaches to Fiction class, and a C, can you believe it, a C from a Literature Semester section. I'll never make it if I get a B in Core Lit. Never. I just don't know what to do."

He was almost in tears now, and his pipe was still unlighted. He borrowed another match and tried again, but his hands were trembling too much and it went out.

"Grades are just medieval, that's all," he said. "The competition is ludicrous. The way some of the brown-nosers in the department suck up to their students makes me just ill, simply ill. I should have gone into something easy, like psychology."

He shrugged and stared into the floorboards. Keeble left him like that. When she looked back, his nose was down in the cracks again as he looked for his lost pages.

'We stay out of Asia rifts'

By MARK KLEIN
Staff Writer

The new reality in the United States' Asian policy "is the absence of our involvement in conflict," according to Michael H. Armacost of the Department of State Policy Planning Staff, who spoke in the Union yesterday.

The ex-Special Assistant to the U.S. Ambassador in Tokyo spoke to about forty people on "Adjustments in U.S. Policy in Asia in the Post-Vietnam Era." Armacost's presentation was sponsored by the Department of East Asian Languages and Literature.

Armacost discussed Asian developments in the last two years.

He said officials in Washington now agree that the U.S. is better off not being involved in conflicts in Asia. "It has removed a divisive issue from our domestic agenda," he said, "and it has removed psychological burdens... in terms of our Asian relations."

Policy makers are using inductive rather than deductive reasoning in policy formulation, Armacost said. The focus now is on "specific relationships with specific countries," he said.

Policy used to be based on the "grand deduction" — officials started with a general policy statement and then applied it to a situation, Armacost said.

Another recent trend is "the experience of the first decade or decade-and-a-half (after the Vietnam conflict), when people had some doubts (as to) whether we understood what other countries' goals should be," Armacost said.

This has been accentuated by the "difficulty mobilizing, through representative institutions in Washington, the funds to implement these designs (American definitions of Asian nations' goals) if we still had them," he said.

"The executive branch is no longer in control of foreign policy," he said, because of the changed "bargaining relationship" between Congress and the Executive branch.

This also lessens other countries' abilities to know what the U.S. will do. They can't accept an executive directive as being the last word, Armacost said, and they have to guess what policies Congress will tolerate.

Other new factors affecting U.S. foreign policy, Armacost said, are the uncertainty of domestic stability in key governments in Asia; the fact that the United States is not recognized by Asians as the main factor in their affairs; and the emergence of "regional consciousness" on the Asian continent.

Armacost reviewed U.S. policy of the last two years with regard to the Soviet Union, Japan, China, Korea and Southeast Asia.

He said Soviet intentions in Asia are "uncertain" but officials in Washington "are not paranoid because they (the Soviets) are not an overwhelming power compared to the Chinese."

China is asking the U.S. to abrogate its military relations with Taiwan, he said. The Chinese see the Taiwan-Red China conflict as a national problem, he added.

Armacost said the U.S. is still trying to resolve the stalemate in Korea, and at the same time, is dealing with a more-independent policy of the South Korean government, which he termed "an unhealthy expression of self-reliance."

New rules cut back work-study

By BILL JOHNSON
Staff Writer

UI students on work-study will not be eligible for work-study jobs this summer, unless they are enrolled for at least one semester hour of credit. They also will not be allowed to work more than 20 hours a week due to an administrative rules change by the UI Office of Financial Aids.

John Kundel, assistant director of financial aids, said the decision to change the rules was prompted by a growing interest in work-study jobs. He said that 1,200 students are currently on work-study and he expected the number to increase to 1,300-1,400 by 1977.

"We found there were a large number of students who wanted work-study jobs," Kundel said. "At the same time, we found there were students who worked on work-study jobs in the summer and were not enrolled in the summer (academic) programs. Some had as many as three jobs."

Last summer, over 500 UI students held work-study jobs, and Kundel said he expects about the same number this year. The new ruling, he said, would mean that the total number of work-study hours this summer would "probably" be cut down.

"To qualify for work-study, a student must show financial need and register to take at least one hour of credit in the summer and six hours per semester. No work-study student will be allowed to work more than 20 hours a week," Kundel said.

"What we're doing is limiting the number of hours so more people can work," Kundel said. "We aren't going to throw people off the program; we're just going to cut down the number of hours worked."

CAMBUS, the largest work-study employer on campus, employs approximately 100 students as drivers, supervisors and dispatchers. CAMBUS coordinator, Carol Dehne, said the new ruling will hurt that organization.

"The biggest problem we know is that students will have to be terminated when they reach their maximum need," she said. "Because we will need more drivers with the new rules, we will have to use more trainers to train new people. In a sense, this is a cost because these people are using up their eligibility faster in training, when we could use them for something else."

'DeProsse not behind renewal suit'

By MARK MITTELSTADT
Asst. News Editor

Two plaintiffs in a lawsuit seeking to halt the city's sale of downtown urban renewal land to Old Capitol Associates responded angrily Thursday to statements made earlier by Old Capitol lawyers that Iowa City Councilperson Carol deProsse is behind the suit.

"I am concerned and angered by the frivolity of the accusations being made by Old Capitol Associates' attorney (Jay Honohan)," said plaintiff Jeanne Smithfield, 49.

Plaintiff Harold Bechtoldt, 1152 E. Court St., said a story reporting the lawyers' statements in the Iowa City Press-Citizen, a local newspaper and an original investor in an Old Capitol fund-raising firm, "is one of the most biased articles I have ever seen." Bechtoldt is a UI psychology professor.

The third plaintiff, Charles Eastham, a University Hospitals clerk, could not be reached Thursday.

The plaintiffs met Thursday night to consider possible action against Old Capitol's lawyers' statements.

The statements concerning deProsse's involvement were made Wednesday by lawyers for Old Capitol, which has intervened in the renewal lawsuit on the city's side. In arguing against an unsuccessful motion by the three plaintiffs to delay trial of the suit until May 17, the lawyers said the three have been "advised, assisted and been in consort" with deProsse, who, the lawyers charged, "has been a party to this action since its inception..."

Joining Old Capitol in the intervention are 24 Iowa City residents, seven of whom are investors in We The People, Inc., which owns a 9.5 per cent interest in an 85 per cent partnership of Old Capitol, according to pre-trial discovery information. In addition, four other intervening residents are indirectly tied to investors in We The People.

Old Capitol's lawyers also asserted that pre-trial depositions taken from the plaintiffs show that deProsse "introduced" the three plaintiffs to each other at a January meeting in her home and "advised on an individual basis each of the plaintiffs regarding this lawsuit in the year 1975 and two of the plaintiffs in 1974."

These comments were refuted by Smithfield and deProsse. DeProsse said she had talked to two of the plaintiffs "generally about matters pertaining to urban renewal" in 1974 and 1975, but she "certainly hadn't talked to anybody about it (the lawsuit)" until "January or February" of this year.

"I do admit to having brought them together," she said. "It certainly seemed appropriate to bring three people with similar interests together."

Smithfield said the statement on the 1974 and 1975 discussions with deProsse "represents a misreading of the depositions given by the plaintiffs." But that was denied by one Old Capitol attorney, Jay Oehler, who said Thursday "we certainly didn't distort anything — this is what they said in their sworn testimony."

The three plaintiffs filed their suit against the city Feb. 24, about one month after a motion by deProsse asking the city to take the Old Capitol contract to court was turned down 4-3 by the City Council.

The three allege in their suit, similar to an earlier case settled out of court, that the city has violated competitive bidding laws in the renewal contract, that Iowa law has been violated by non-urban renewal land being sold at less than fair market value, and that the seven contract amendments have favored Old Capitol, resulting in the city relinquishing substantial contractual rights.

Trial in the case is scheduled to begin Monday, after Johnson County District Court Judge James H. Carter denied Wednesday the plaintiffs' request for a delay. The three had asked for the delay to allow their counsel, Bruce Washburn, time to complete pre-trial discovery proceedings, and to examine and organize further information in the case.

Honohan had argued that the delay would cause Old Capitol to suffer financial losses in the renewal project.

In attacking Honohan's statements on deProsse advising the plaintiffs, Smithfield said "the intention here is to infer that the plaintiffs planned on filing a lawsuit against the city, perhaps as early as 1974, but delayed action until February of 1976 to cause the greatest possible damage to the city and to Old Capitol Associates."

"The truth of the statements given in the depositions is that the plaintiffs discussed the issues in the lawsuit...with members of the City Council and city staff many times during 1974 and 1975," she said. "Mr. Honohan is aware that the plaintiffs had not met each other until January of 1976, one month before the lawsuit was filed."

OF SPECIAL INTEREST

Carlos Boker, currently a graduate student at the University of Iowa, participated in the Costa Gavras film, State of Siege. Although his actual acting in it is minimal, his involvement with those who made the film is interesting to note, as most of the actors are members of the Theatre Department of the University of Chile, of which Boker was a faculty member.

The film is of particular emotional value to him, because most of those acting parts of torture, death or confinement in the film, were to experience these parts in reality, after September 11, when the fascists took over the country. A discussion on the film will be held on Friday, after the seven o'clock showing.

3 Hawks picked early in pro draft

NEW YORK (AP) — Three former UI football players were selected Thursday in the first two rounds of the National Football League draft which continues today.

All-American tackle Rod Walters (6-4, 260 pounds) was the 14th player selected in the draft, as he was picked by the Kansas City Chiefs in the first round. Joe Devlin (6-5, 270), an All-American guard for the Hawkeyes last season, was picked by Buffalo in the second round, and one of the leading rushers in Iowa history, Jim Jensen, a 6-4, 230 pound running back, was taken by Dallas, also in the second round.

Running backs dominated the opening round of the draft Thursday and Leroy and Dewey Selmon, Oklahoma's All-American brother act, both were picked by the expansion Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Leroy Selmon was the draft's No. 1 selection, then Tampa reunited the brothers by selecting Dewey as the final choice of the draft's second round.

After Tampa opened the draft by picking Leroy, Seattle, the NFL's other expansion club, picked another defensive lineman, Steve Niehaus of Notre Dame. Then the runners took over, with a half-dozen of them chosen through the remainder of the first round.

Among the quality rushers picked quickly were Chuck Muncie of California, who went to New Orleans; Oklahoma's Joe Washington, selected by San Diego; Mike Pruitt of Purdue, drafted by Cleveland; Bubba Bean of Texas A&M, who went to Atlanta, and Lawrence Gaines of Wyoming, picked by Detroit. All of them went in the draft's first 16 selections.

Two-time Heisman Trophy winner Archie Griffin of Ohio State was the sixth and final running back chosen in the first round, drafted by Cincinnati. He was the 24th player selected.

Tampa Bay chose Selmon quickly, then introduced the huge Oklahoma tackle, complete with a Buccaneers' uniform shirt equipped with his name and the number 1 to indicate his draft position.

While Tampa was celebrating the Selmon selection, Seattle used almost all of its 15-minute allotment before making Niehaus the draft's No. 2 pick.

New Orleans took almost as long as Seattle before going for Muncie, who was regarded as the nation's best running back by most pro observers. Then San Diego followed with another running back, choosing Washington, a teammate of Selmon's at Oklahoma.

New England then used the first of its three opening round choices to draft defensive back Mike Haynes of Arizona State. The Patriots' other first-round choices were center Pete Brock from Colorado and defensive back Tim Fox of Ohio State.

The next pick belonged to the New York Jets and home team anticipation buzzed through the packed gallery where fans watched the draft procedure.

One group of fans offered some unsolicited advice to the Jets, holding up a sign that said: "Jets Don't Blow It. Take Todd In The Ist."

The reference was to Alabama quarterback Richard Todd, and when NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle announced that the Jets had, indeed, drafted the Alabama signal caller, the fans roared their approval.

Todd was the only quarterback selected in the first round.

Floyd leads Masters golf

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Ray Floyd, now conducting a love affair with the game he once played only for money, used a newly built five wood club to dominate the par-five holes, shot a brilliant, seven-under-par 65 and swept into the first-round lead Thursday in the 40th Masters golf championship.

"I'm getting that Augusta feeling," the happy Floyd said after he reeled off a string of four consecutive birdies on the back nine and came within one shot of the all-time record for this, the first of the year's four major tests of golfing greatness.

Floyd, 33 and in his 14th season on the pro tour, reached three par five holes with the new wood club he had built especially for this tournament and called that the key to the effort that gave him a one-stroke lead over upstart Andy North.

North, a 6-4, 26-year-old Masters rookie who has yet to win as a pro, played his first competitive round over the 7,000 yards of hills and valleys, ponds and pines that make up the Augusta National Golf Course in only 66 strokes.

He conquered the glass-slick greens of this famed course with a $2 putter he jerked out of a junk shop during his college days at the University of Florida. He needed only 28 puts, 13 on the back nine.

UI Rugby Club to play Saturday

Just two shots out of the lead with a 67 loomed the awesome figure of Jack Nicklaus, the defending champion and the over-whelming favorite to acquire a sixth title in the tournament he has dominated for more than a decade.

Nicklaus appeared headed for a mediocre round, somewhere around par, until he changed the complexion of the whole tournament with one magnificent shot on the 15th hole, a 520-yard par five.

He lashed his second shot only six feet from the flag, hanging limply in the hazy distance, then rapped in the putt for an eagle three. Suddenly he was four under par and closing. A birdie on the 17th hole put him in prime position.

He was tied at five under par with Larry Ziegler. Ziegler also keyed his round on a quick birdie-eagle-birdie burst. He scored birdie fours on the 13th and 15th holes and earned a loud cheer from the massive gallery around the 14th hole when his eight-iron shot from 140 yards out on the fairway trickled into the cup for an eagle two.

Lou Graham, the reigning U.S. Open champion, was at 68, with veteran Dave Hill and little Buddy Allin registering 69s.

Ben Crenshaw, who scored two consecutive victories early in the season, managed a 70.

Return to Forever: The Masters.

Chick Corea, Stanley Clarke, Lenny White and Al DiMeola have created a music that presents staggering technical demands, emphasizes interplay between musicians, and insists on constant originality.

They've developed a style which is increasingly imitated. But there's no doubt who the masters are. Return to Forever. "Romantic Warrior." A radically original album on Columbia Records.

For Openers

The final votes have been cast and so far, we have managed a solid victory and a solid upset. Fifty-fifty is not bad, but you'll have to do better with the DI's For Openers baseball contest. Grand Prize is a six-pack of cheap beer and an apple pie that'll make you stand up and sing "God Bless America."

A clear majority (75-2) picked Cincinnati to beat Houston, and the World Champions did just that in Thursday's opening game, winning 11-5. The voters went to with New York (61-16), but the Brewers from Milwaukee had their say and came away a 5-0 winner Thursday. The winning teams have scored 16 runs in two games, so keep that in mind when it comes time to decide the tie-breaker.

Three people decided to take advantage of our generosity and flooded us with more than one vote. But they forgot to read the fine print on the bottom of the entry box. It was written by an old Cub fan and says, "Yer outta da ball game." Better luck next time, fellas.

Here are the final picks of 77 legal voters, those who used wooden bats in little league and cringe at the sound of aluminum: New York 71, Montreal 6; St. Louis 48, Chicago 29; San Diego 48, Atlanta 19; Los Angeles 40, San Francisco 27; Philadelphia 46, Pittsburgh 31; Baltimore 52, Boston 25; Kansas City 49, Chicago 28; Minnesota 47, Texas 30; Oakland 60, California 17; Cleveland 56, Detroit 21.

Women's softball team trounces Upper Iowa

By KAREN SMITH
Staff Writer

The women's softball team outclassed Upper Iowa College of Fayette Thursday, amassing 37 runs to Upper Iowa's five in the first game and winning the second 11-0 after three innings of play.

Iowa started the first game with a 10-run burst; Upper Iowa failed to score until the sixth inning. The Iowa women went scoreless in the second and gathered two runs in the third before Shirley Vargason and Roxie Albrecht each blasted home runs in the fourth inning. Before the inning was over, Iowa had gathered 13 runs, and went on to add one more in the fifth. Then in the sixth, Emily Endreson socked a homer into left field as Iowa finished the inning with 11 runs and a total of 24 hits to Upper Iowa's five.

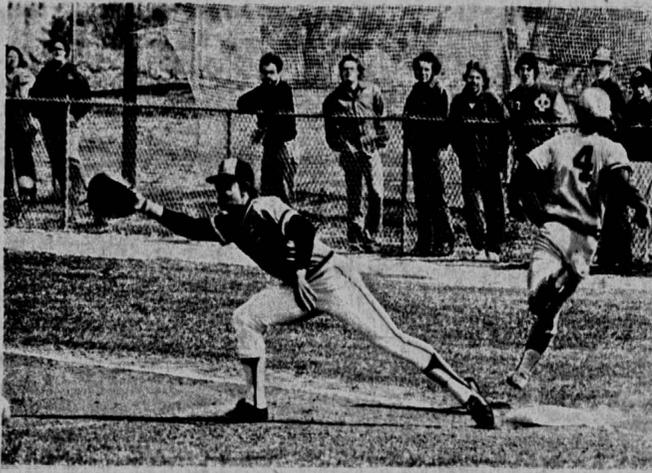

Although Iowa started the game with its first team lineup, by the fifth inning the second team was in.

Peg "Augie" Augspurger pitched the first game, and Kathy Keifer took charge of the second. In the three-inning game, Iowa scored two runs in the first inning, another two in the second, and seven in the third, totaling 11 runs with seven hits, while Upper Iowa went scoreless.

The softball teams will travel Saturday to Pella, Iowa, to meet Central College and Iowa Wesleyan.

In other action, the women's junior-varsity tennis team defeated Upper Iowa's varsity netters 7-0. It was the first taste of competition for many of the women netters, who will get another crack Saturday when they meet Western Missouri and Graceland College at Lamon, Iowa.

Too late

Hawkeye Steve Stumpff stretches in vain as a Cornell batter beats the throw in last Saturday's first game. The Iowa baseball team will take the field again this weekend, hosting two games with Northern Iowa beginning at 1 p.m. on the Iowa diamond. Bob Stepp (3-0) and Tom Steen are slated to pitch for Iowa Coach Duane Banks, whose team is now 8-7 on the year. Iowa will host Western Illinois for a doubleheader next Tuesday before preparing for Big Ten play April 16-17 with Michigan State and Michigan.

WHY DO FOUR LARGE ADVENT SPEAKERS ARRANGED IN A PECULIAR MANNER SOUND SO DARN GOOD?

ANSWER:

We don't know, but something illogical and almost magical does seem to happen. The double Advent speaker system (as it is commonly known) sounds much better than four large adventures ought to. The system continues to draw rave reviews from critics and owners alike as the least expensive all-out speaker system available.

We have it on display now and invite your critical evaluation.

Great American Happenings

The following are selected Bicentennial projects of students from Mrs. Martin's 5th grade class of Hoover Elementary, Iowa City.

These are letters written by the colonists to parents in England after they had settled in Jamestown, Virginia.

Heather Marie Will

Jamestown, Virginia
June 26, 1608

Dear Mother and Father,

How are you? I am fine. We are starving and people are dying from illnesses and disease. The Indians have attacked us about 4 times. There have been 20 births. They are starting to dig a well and fix up the houses. There are grapevines that grow along the river's edge. The men are trying to find a river passage to the Pacific Ocean and for gold. How are the Smiths, Alibones and the Jones? Ships are starting to bring supplies. Captain John Smith is in command of the settlement. Ships are coming in with Poles and Germans. They know how to make glass and soap. John Smith has gone to England.

Dear Mom and Dad,

How are you? I am fine. Life here is very hard. We have to work for our food, but we have very little. Many of us have been killed by Indians. Many others have died from starvation or disease. But at least our colony has improved since the new settlers came. Captain Smith returned to England a couple of months ago. We hope he will return soon with supplies.

Write to me soon.

Dear Mom, Dad,

This has been a terrible summer. Mosquitoes are bad. They are giving us bad illnesses. There's barely enough food. No one wants to work, and it's so hot. I haven't found any gold yet. No one has.

Indians gave us some corn. We finally got people to plant it. Many people have died. There's only about 1/4 of the people alive. Things are going better and we'll have a town soon! We are on the James River.

Dear Mom and Dad,

Life is alot different here. We have to work on gardens for our food. There aren't as many people here as there are over there in England.

Yesterday was very hot and sticky, and today it is raining outside, so I decided to write a letter.

How is everything and everybody doing there?

A few days ago my hoe broke. I repaired it quickly.

People here are trying to make larger settlements. So far it has come out pretty successful.

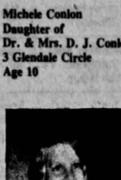

Some of these colonists own huge farms, and they are mainly known as planters and they call their farms plantations. Their farms are so big they have many helpers.

Here there is a neat river called the James River. One week ago we traded corn with the Indians. They have outstanding corn and they are excellent farmers.

The swamps are muddy and we had to drink from it, except yesterday our well was finished so we can drink cleaner water.

I don't know the next time I'll see you. Please write back.

Love,
Michele Conlon

Dear Mother and Father,

I wish you and Baby Anna would come to Jamestown soon. I miss you so much.

When I arrived in Jamestown on the ship I had the surprise of my life. The people were as thin as onion skins and light as feathers. With my clothes compared to theirs, mine was very queer. Then I had supper at Elizabeth's and William's. Any other time I would have been sick at the sight of food like that, but I did not want to hurt their feelings.

The next morning I took a tour of the town. There was hardly any food in the town. I have seen so many people killed by Indians. People are dying from sickness everywhere.

Please come soon.

Love,
Hannah

Dear Mom & Dad,

How is everything back at home? It is very boring in the New World. I wish I were back at home with you and the dog. I will be coming home in about 6 months for the winter. Here it is very hot, and it is hard to plant crops. They say this is a very good place to start a settlement. Captain Smith brought back about 500 people with him, but not many will be able to live through the winter because there are not enough supplies.

See you in about a month.

Dear Ma & Pa,

I just got to Jamestown, Virginia. I'm tired and hungry but I have to start my house. This is going to be a short letter because I have to get started or I won't get any food. My leader is Peter Crose. He's pretty nice. How's everything up there? Oh, Oh, he's yelling at me again. I better go. Bye. (I'm coming, Sir.)

P.S. Jamestown is pretty bad but tomorrow I'm going to go and get some clothes. Also there are a lot of Indians that attack. Well goodbye.

Love
Your son

Dear Mom and Dad,

This winter was really bad! Almost everyone got sick. More than half of the people got so sick that they ended up dying. It was really bad! I got sick twice but luckily I got better. One of the times I was really sick. I had to stay in bed for about two months. I felt terrible! You don't have to worry any more though. Now I feel fine.

During the winter we started running out of food. The most we got in a whole day was some dirty water and a little bit of berries. I'm sure glad that's over with! Now I can eat properly.

It started going better when Captain John Smith was in command. One time he locked the storage house and said, "He who does not work, shall not eat." And then people started working!

A lot of settlers have been coming in since then. There are a lot of people here now. I hope you will decide to come to Jamestown too. I miss you a lot!

Love,
Kathy

1793: We begin to build big business.

Now that we've gained our independence, we need to grow up. We need to compete in our own country with the imports England can sell us more cheaply than we can sell our own products to ourselves. We need to get out of this postwar depression. We've got the resources, the minds and the men. Men like Eli Whitney, a young Yale graduate who visited a plantation one day and almost instantly saw a way to clean cotton fifty times faster than we've been doing it by hand. His cotton engine (we'll shorten it to "cotton gin") makes cotton king in the South. Soon, Charleston will ship twenty million pounds of it in one year. But Whitney won't stop there. He's getting busy figuring out a way to make guns without a single gunsmith! And we're waiting to see whether his assembly line idea will work out. ☺
