Final county results

By Staff Writer

A recent count of Johnson County votes cast in the presidential race showed the margin of victory was a smaller percentage than in earlier polls.

The unofficial final tally of 36,959 Johnson County votes, released yesterday by the county auditor's office, shows the county's percentage of votes cast for President Jimmy Carter was 54.9 percent; for President Ford, 45.1 percent.

The vote total was announced after a recount of ballots in Monroe Township. The recount was necessary because the vote total for the county auditor's office showed a discrepancy between the hand count of 36,959 ballots and the electronic count of 37,050 ballots.

The county courthouse was to be notified immediately by the county auditor of the final vote count, according to state law. The county election board was to be notified in writing by the county auditor of the final vote count, according to state law.

Death tabloid lifted by ironic comedy

BY MARY SCHWAB

A guy from my hometown died last week. His name was Randy. He was 24. He always loved cars, and he was a very talented mechanic. In fact, he had his own business where he specialized in Classic Cars restoration. I never knew him, but his death was a shock to the community. Randy died in a car accident, and it was ironic because he had just bought a new car just a few days before. It was a coincidence, but it left everyone feeling sad for sure.

We're doing an analysis of the coverage of the death tabloid. The death of a local celebrity has always been a big story in our town. People were very shocked and were mourning the loss of someone they knew. Randy was a very well-liked person, and his death has impacted the community a lot. We're looking at how this story has been covered by the media and how people have been reacting to it.

The smoking ban unfair: the ‘complications’ unjust

BY EMMETT HOLT

In the Iowa capital city of Des Moines, there is a proposal to ban smoking in public places. This has been a controversial issue, and people have strong opinions on both sides. People who support the ban argue that it will improve public health and reduce secondhand smoke. Those who oppose it say that it will destroy jobs and businesses. In a city like Des Moines, where the economy is already struggling, this could be a big problem. The debate is ongoing, and it will be interesting to see how things play out.

Iowa - no corridor on provincialism market

BY JULIUS TOLAN

Iowa is a state known for its agricultural industry, tourism, and education. It is also known for its small towns and rural areas. While the state has a strong agricultural background, it is also home to several universities and colleges. These institutions contribute to the state's economy and provide opportunities for students. Iowa is a diverse state, with a mix of urban and rural areas, and it is important to consider how these different communities interact with each other.

The Daily Iowan is a student newspaper at the University of Iowa. It's a great resource for anyone interested in Iowa news and events. The staff at the Daily Iowan does a fantastic job of covering the university and the state. I'm looking forward to seeing what they have to say about this year's election.

War on swine flu sweeps on

By Tom MAPP

Editor's note: This report is part of a series on flu prevention and the potential impact of flu on the economy. The first article, "Flu 2000: A national emergency," appeared on Page 1.

In February 1918 swine flu viruses were isolated from pigs in the United States and Europe. The virus was transmitted to humans, causing an influenza epidemic that lasted from 1918 to 1919. The virus infected more than 500 million people worldwide and killed an estimated 20 million to 50 million people.

In the United States, the flu pandemic lasted from 1918 to 1919, and it was the first time that a flu epidemic had affected more than one continent. The virus was transmitted from pigs to humans, and it spread quickly through the population. The flu pandemic had a significant impact on the economy, with widespread deaths and disruptions to business and industry.

In the current flu season, public health officials are monitoring the spread of the virus and are working to prevent its spread. They are advising people to wash their hands frequently, stay home when sick, and get vaccinated against the flu.

In the past, public health officials have used various strategies to combat the flu, including vaccination campaigns and the use of antiviral drugs. In recent years, however, the flu virus has become more resistant to antiviral drugs, making it more difficult to control.

In the current flu season, public health officials are working to combat the virus by using a combination of strategies, including vaccination campaigns, antiviral drugs, and public health education.

In the past, public health officials have used vaccination campaigns to combat the flu. These campaigns have been successful in reducing the number of flu cases, but they have not been able to completely eliminate the virus.

In the current flu season, public health officials are working to improve vaccination rates by targeting groups that are at higher risk for flu, such as the elderly, pregnant women, and children under 5.

In the past, public health officials have used antiviral drugs to combat the flu. These drugs are effective in reducing the severity and duration of the flu, but they are expensive and can have side effects.

In the current flu season, public health officials are working to improve the availability and access to antiviral drugs. They are also working to reduce the side effects of these drugs.

In the past, public health officials have used public health education to combat the flu. This has included educating people about the symptoms and prevention of the flu, and encouraging them to get vaccinated.

In the current flu season, public health officials are working to improve public health education by using social media and other technologies to reach people.

Demonstrate carry on legislation

Democrats, who dislodged Republicans from the House of Representatives last month, have a 3-2 margin in the chamber and are accordingly in a strong position to press through legislation. Republicans will make it harder for Democrats to pass their legislative programs. Defending the Senate Democrats control the Senate, and Republicans will try to hold their edge, despite the loss of the Senate in November. But the Senate will give Democratic leadership a chance to make their mark. The Senate will be in session until the day after the New Year.

Republican leaders, in particular Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, said he would be in Washington as soon as he could to work with the Democratic leaders.

"I don't know yet what the future will be," said Byrd. "I am working to make sure we can work together. I will see the Senate leadership to make sure we can work together. I will try to make sure we can work together as soon as possible."
Voter’s ‘didn’t care’ to be apathetic

By The Associated Press

The experts predicted that Americans were too apathetic to vote this year. That the experts relented and added the word “decided” didn’t help much.

“There was not enough talk about apathy, that people decided not to be apathetic,” said one political scientist. “There was a feeling among the public that the vote would be a win for one side.”

On a state level, the turnout was about 30 percent of the voting age population below the level predicted by major newspapers, but lower than the turnout levels for any state since 1960.

The percentage of the voting age population that voted in the 2016 presidential election was significantly lower than the 2012 presidential election, with more than 12 percent per cent turned out for the 2016 election between Richard M. Nixon and John F. Kennedy. For the fourth consecutive election, voting as a percentage of the eligible population declined, according to data from the U.S. Census Bureau, for the study of the American Electorate.

The committee said in detail that in the past several years, the number of people who voted has dropped significantly.

Another is farm policy, specifically in Wisconsin, where Dane County voters turned down by a narrow margin in Massachusetts and by a wider margin in Colorado.

Interference with farmers was a concern about possible Democratic policies.

The Wisconsin proposal would have required deposits on beer and soft drink containers, as well as on 43.5 per cent of the voting age population in the 2016 presidential election.

Another is farm policy, specifically, the national average and safety factors. But a measure passed in Missouri could block the state’s proposal from being considered.

McLaughlin to miss Wisconsin contest

By ARNIE HAYGOOD

Lake Forest, Ill. (AP) - A preseason favorite to win the Western Athletic Conference, McLaughlin and Bulldogs were headed to Saturday night's match against Northern Illinois.

"It doesn't look good," Coach Ed Martin said. "We're looking at a lot of changes."

Frequent changes have been a hallmark of McLaughlin's progress this season. Last year's team, which included many of the current starters, was a different team just a year ago.

"It's been a struggle," said defensive coordinator Bob Lyle. "We're still working on getting our offense back to where it was last year."

McLaughlin's struggles have been evident throughout the season. The Bulldogs have lost five games and have yet to win a conference game.

"I think we're going to have a lot of work to do," Lyle added. "We're going to have to start playing better if we want to win games."

Lyle said the defense has been the strength of the team. The Bulldogs currently rank 13th in the nation in total defense, allowing 23.5 points per game.

Despite the struggles, McLaughlin is looking forward to the game against Northern Illinois.

"We're going to need to play well," Lyle said. "If we do, we have a chance to win."

Arnie, army hope for the best

By DESTOY RUGBY

Army head coach Destoy Rugby said he is hopeful for a return to form for his team.

"We've been working hard all season," Rugby said. "I think we have the talent to be successful."

Rugby said the team has been struggling with injuries and poor play.

"We've had some issues," Rugby said. "But we're working on fixing them."

NFL linemen see sea of yellow

By HARI DIXON

The Dallas Cowboys have been named the NFL's team of the year by Pro Football Weekly.

"They've been dominant," said Pro Football Weekly's Dan Wilson. "They've been the best team in the league all season."

Wilson said the Cowboys have a great offense and defense, which have been the keys to their success.

"Their offensive line is the best in the league," Wilson said. "And their defense is just as good."

The Cowboys have won 12 games this season and are currently the No. 1 seed in the NFC. They are favored to win the NFC championship and Super Bowl.

"They're a very good team," Wilson said. "I think they have a real shot at winning it all."
