

Carter drops $50 rebate; cites economy and politics

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter, admitting political considerations were also a factor, withdrew his $50 tax rebate proposal Thursday on grounds the improving economy no longer needs the stimulus.

In an appearance in the White House press room, Carter personally announced the decision that followed two days of closed meetings with his economic, political and congressional aides.

"Yes, there were political and economic considerations," he said. "The overwhelming thing, though, was economic. We could have passed the economic stimulus package in its entirety had we decided to go ahead with it."

But he acknowledged that many Democratic congressional leaders had "lost their enthusiasm" for it. The leaders had said the House-passed rebate proposal was in serious trouble in the Senate. "I've been accused of a lot of things," Carter said. "I don't believe anyone has ever accused me of being afraid of a political fight or of being too quick to compromise."

"I did not back off because I feared political defeat." In New York, the stock market soared more than nine points, apparently in response to early reports Carter was dropping the rebate proposal, which many businessmen opposed as inflationary.

Carter said that last December, when he and the Democratic congressional leadership hammered out the two-year, $31 billion economic stimulus package, the rebate proposal was justified because "unemployment was 8 per cent, the economy was dormant, to say the least, and inflationary pressures were not as great as they are now."

He then cited the reduction in unemployment, the increase in inflationary pressures and the prospective impact of his energy package to be announced next week as reasons for dropping the rebate. Congressional reaction was generally favorable. Rep. Henry Reuss, D-Wis., called the move "a retrieve, not a retreat," and other Democrats said the rebate plan could be revived if the economic picture changes.

The House had already passed the rebate proposal. It had cleared a Senate committee and was to be debated on the floor Monday when Congress returns.

Carter said the single most important factor in his decision to drop the rebate was an unexpected increase in retail sales. He said the increase proves consumer confidence is up — one of his objectives last December.

The rebate, which was to go to almost every American at a cost of $11 billion, was a central part of his overall economic stimulus package.

Only last week, Carter made another personal appearance in the press room to stress the necessity of the rebate.

But Thursday he said the remaining $20 billion package "will guarantee us durable growth." Most of the remainder consists of training programs, jobs and public works projects.

Carter said the $11 billion saved by eliminating the rebate would go toward the federal deficit, dropping the estimated deficit in the budget in fiscal 1977 to $56.8 billion.

"I'm determined to hold down the deficit this year...leading toward a balanced budget by 1981," he said.

Earlier, a top source said the President could have won his battle to get passage of the rebate in the Senate, but it would have been costly in terms of the pressure the White House would have had to apply.

The source said there were about 40 votes for and 40 against the rebate in the Senate, with the remaining 20 undecided.

Dropping the rebate proposal gives Carter a stronger hand in his attempt to stop funding of about 30 controversial water projects, which some senators had been using in bargaining for their votes in favor of the rebate.

Firefighters in Cherry Hill, N.J., attempt to keep a blaze from moving toward a giant fuel oil tank at the Garden State race track Thursday.

The fire broke out in the track's clubhouse during the day's racing program, forcing approximately 10,000 fans to flee. Five persons were reported to be hospitalized.

Library inferno to end

By SUE STUEKERJURGEN

Mechanics from the UI Physical Plant worked Thursday to get the air conditioning units turned on for at least the northern portion of the Main Library, according to Prof. Dale Bentz, UI librarian.

However, a faulty carrier will prevent the air conditioning from cooling the southern part of the building, Bentz said.

As the temperatures outside rose to the 80s this week the temperatures in the library climbed as high as 87 degrees.

"The cooling towers for the units have been filled, and hopefully, by the time we come to the library Friday morning we'll be able to tell the difference in temperatures," Bentz said.

Duane Nollsch, director of the Physical Plant, said that while the broken unit couldn't be repaired, the warmer air in the southern section would mix with the cooled air to create a noticeable difference.

"The parts for the broken unit have been on order all winter, and all I can say is that they are on their way and we'll repair it as soon as the parts come in," Nollsch said.

The air conditioning in other UI buildings will be turned on as soon as workers from the Physical Plant can accommodate them, Nollsch said.

"We've received so many calls we've had to establish priorities to decide who to help first," he said. "The library was high on our list, but it seems as if animals and machines come first over human needs."

For instance, the air conditioning in laboratories that house animals was turned on before units in other buildings.

"We're sorry for the delay in this, as we realized that this is a big time of year for students with finals two weeks away," Bentz said. "But it wasn't a matter of going down to the basement and just flipping on a switch, or else we would have done it. We had to wait until the Physical Plant could fit us in."

Saga ends: Old Brick saved — Honest

By DAVE HEMINGWAY
Staff Writer

Attorneys for the First Presbyterian Church Corp. and Old Brick Associates will meet at 2 p.m. today to complete the settlement of the Old Brick lawsuit and to sell the structure to the associates.

The associates will finish paying all but $1,000 of the $154,410 they are spending to buy Old Brick today. The final $1,000 will be paid to the Presbyterians as soon as a lien requested against the structure in 1975 is nullified.

The associates will buy Old Brick according to the following procedure:

—$14,000 will be paid to the state Board of Regents as a repayment of the down payment the regents made in 1974 when they contracted with the Presbyterians to buy the Old Brick site. The contract had required that the sanctuary be razed before the regents took ownership of the property.

—$135,000 will be paid to the Presbyterians for the Old Brick property. The associates have already paid $4,410 to the Presbyterians to show they were dealing in good faith.

In addition to buying Old Brick, a suit filed against the Presbyterians by the Old Brick Defense Committee will be officially dropped. That suit, filed last July on the same day that the Presbyterians began to dismantle the building, sought to permanently nullify the regents' contract with the Presbyterians.

The associates are using a $70,000 loan from a local bank, the first part of a $70,000 federal grant, and money the associates put up themselves to purchase Old Brick. "We are now searching for quasi-public service type or institutional type tenants," said attorney John Nolan, a member of the associates. "There's a large area of office space in the west wing of the building that we will be renting out."

The west wing of the structure has two floors of 2,000 square feet, Nolan said. He added that it would be rented out at $4 per square foot.

Within the next 30 days, Nolan said, the offices of the Division of Historic Preservation of the State Historical Department will move into the basement of Old Brick.

These offices have been in MacLean Hall, but were moved out two-three weeks ago to the old Me-Too store on the corner of Van Buren and Washington streets.

"This is a good example of what we've been talking about," Nolan said. "Preservation of the building (Old Brick) will be a useful solution to space problems. It's certainly more useful than a heap of demolished rubble."

Adrian Anderson, director of the Historical Preservation Division, said there is already $10,000 set aside in federal preservation funds to help start the renovation of Old Brick. Because Old Brick is on the Register of Historic Places, it will qualify for further preservation grants, he added.

The cost of restoring the structure has been estimated to be $150,000.

State may phase out halfway houses project

By S.P. FOWLER
Staff Writer

Editor's note: This is the last of three articles on half-way houses in Iowa City.

Depending on a decision made today by the Iowa Community Correctional Services, the future of half-way houses such as Project Hope could be in jeopardy.

"The state is changing its mind about how it wants to handle community corrections, and Project Hope may be phased out," according to Project Hope Executive Director Cathy Baumback.

Baumback said the state is beginning to fund more "alternate jail facilities," and fewer half-way houses. Alternate jail facilities are larger (30 beds or more) and have more security and a closer monitoring of residents' behavior than the smaller (6-12 beds) half-way houses.

"I guess the state no longer feels a need for the service Project Hope provides," Baumback said. "There seems to be a trend toward the state funding these pre-institutional facilities to help people before they go to prison, instead of setting up more post-institutional facilities like Project Hope."

According to several persons now living at the Project Hope houses, Iowa City's half-way houses are considered by many ex-offenders to be the "best" community corrections facilities in Iowa.

If the state decides today to close the project, "we would know several months in advance and could phase out our clients according to the regular schedule. We would just accept no new clients," Baumback said. "But we wouldn't be kicking anyone out."

Baumback said she is sure Project Hope's uncertain future is the result of the state's reorganization of the community corrections system.

"We've had no problems with the Iowa City community," she said. "And they've continued the Waterloo program even with all the flack from that community."

The financial status of Project Hope also "has nothing to do with" the program's situation, she said.

The houses now are jointly funded by the Federal Law Enforcement Assistance Agency and by the state social services department. But if the program is continued, Project Hope would lose federal funding in July.

The jobs of several Project Hope employees are also in jeopardy, but Baumback said she is most concerned about the residents.

Half-way houses "help the individual develop the ability to make his own decisions and not have everything done for him like in the institutions," Baumback explained.

If the project closes, persons who might have become residents "will either remain in prison or be put on the street," Baumback said.

No indictments in gun case

By BEVERLY GEBER
Staff Writer

The Johnson County Grand Jury Wednesday refused to return indictments against two law enforcement officials who were under investigation in an incident involving their test-firing of a weapon used in a 1976 murder in Iowa City.

Kaye Mesner, of Iowa City was slain with the gun on Jan. 10, 1976. Michael Remmers, also of Iowa City was convicted of second degree murder in connection with the slaying and was sentenced to 70 years in the Iowa State Penitentiary.

Johnson County Sheriff's Deputy Robert Carpenter and Iowa City police officer William Kidwell had obtained the gun prior to the murder from William C. Willard, an informant and friend of Remmers, and had used it for test firing purposes, before returning it to Willard.

The investigation apparently centered around their conduct in the incident.

After the officers returned the gun to Willard, he gave the gun to Remmers, who used it to kill Mesner a week later.

Grand jurors contacted on Thursday refused to give reasons for their finding of "no bill" in the case.

Remmers, who was recently transferred to University Hospitals in Iowa City following a knife incident at Fort Madison, sent a letter to the Daily Iowan last fall, placing blame on the officers for Mesner's death.

If they had not returned the gun, charged Remmers, "Kaye Mesner would be alive today." Neither Carpenter nor Kidwell could be reached for comment concerning the Grand Jury's action.

in the news briefly

Vietnam

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Administration officials said Thursday the United States and Vietnam will begin high-level talks in Paris next month with the aim of improving relations.

The officials said the United States probably will be represented by Richard Holbrooke, assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs. The Vietnamese representative had not been named, according to the officials.

The level of the May talks will be the highest since Henry Kissinger met Le Duc Tho in Paris in 1974, prior to the merger of North and South Vietnam. Washington officials said the United States compromised on its proposal that the discussions begin on a lower diplomatic plane. U.S. officials had hoped the talks could begin in April, but the Vietnamese asked for a postponement until May.

Trawler

BOSTON (UPI) — The mother ship of the Russian fishing fleet operating off the New England coast was released Thursday with only a civil citation for violating the new 200-mile fishing limit.

The Antanas Snehkus, a 503-foot refrigerator ship, was escorted to the Coast Guard station here Monday and 16 tons of fish protected under U.S. fisheries laws were taken off the vessel, Coast Guard officials said.

The vessel left Boston Harbor about 5:30 p.m. to join more than a dozen other Russian fishing ships still working New England waters. A single citation carries a fine of up to $25,000, a Coast Guard official said.

SALT

MOSCOW (UPI) — President Carter's proposals for limiting strategic arms "cannot be the subject of serious discussion," the Soviet Union said Thursday in a warning to Washington to alter its position before high-level SALT talks resume next month.

The Soviets, insisting any new treaty must be based on the 1974 Vladivostok accords between former President Gerald Ford and Communist leader Leonid Brezhnev, defended their willingness to bargain on arms cuts in an unusual commentary carried by the official Tass news agency.

FBI

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Concerned about slumping FBI morale, FBI Director Clarence Kelley indicated Thursday he will ask the Justice Department to drop its indictment of a retired FBI supervisor charged with illegal surveillance of alleged American terrorists.

A few hours earlier 300 FBI agents stood on the steps of a federal courthouse in New York City to demonstrate their support for the former FBI man, John Kearney, who retired in 1972 after 25 years service.

Kelley said he has asked Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell "to review the matter again with the thought of considering the past problems of the FBI in the same light that was afforded the CIA."

"The thrust of the Department's resolution of that matter was based upon the principle that it is not possible to indict an era," Kelley said.

Owen

LUSAKA, Zambia (UPI) — British Foreign Secretary David Owen stopped in Botswana and Zambia Thursday carrying proposals to reconvene the collapsed Geneva conference on Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) with the United States as co-sponsor.

Zimbabweans meeting in Tanzania condemned Owen's "make-believe constitutional exercises" and pledged to escalate the war against Rhodesia's white government.

Saccharin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) said Thursday it will go ahead with its ban on saccharin in diet sodas, foods and cosmetics, but will allow it to be sold separately if manufacturers can prove it has medical value.

Fatalities

Robert James Bergstrom, A4, and John Fred Wimmer, L1, were killed Thursday afternoon

near North Liberty when a truck collided head-on with the motorcycle they were riding, the Iowa State Highway Patrol said.

Police said the accident occurred when the truck, driven by Richard Greenshaw of Mason City, left the northbound lane on U.S. 218 to avoid two cars stopped to make a left turn into the Purple Cow restaurant. Greenshaw apparently did not see them in time to stop, police said. Greenshaw then swerved into the southbound lane and hit the motorcycle, according to authorities.

Charges against Greenshaw are pending.

Weather

Today marks a momentous occasion — it is the day exactly between the anniversary of the sinking of the Titanic and the anniversary of Steve Tracy's birth. Yes, it was a mere 60-odd years ago that the Titanic bit the iceberg, and a mere 20-odd (very odd) years ago that Tracy squealed his first squall. The weather staff wanted to celebrate with champagne and dancing girls and boys, but being impoverished, highs in the 70s and rain will have to do.

the Diamond Engagement Ring

Congratulations Max & Mary

Max and Mary started something and everybody's doing it. It all started on August 17, 1477 when the dashing young Maximilian of Austria asked Mary of Burgundy to be his bride. Like many young men, Max was a little nervous about popping the question, and so he asked an "older man," Dr. Moroltinger, for advice on how to impress Mary. The good doctor replied, "Your Grace must have a ring set with a diamond," when Max slipped the diamond on Mary's third finger left hand, a tradition was born.

Well, it's 500 years later and the tradition still continues and is stronger than ever.

Senate tables blind federation decision

By NEIL BROWN
Staff Writer

A decision on whether to recognize the National Federation of the Blind as a student organization at the UI was once again delayed, when a bill denying the organization recognition because of "discriminatory policy" was tabled by Student Senate Thursday night.

In other senate business, Cody Vincent, A3, informed the body that the new senate-sponsored health insurance policy approved by senate March 31 is in violation of Title IX of the federal office of Health, Education and Welfare prohibiting discrimination.

The policy approved by senate offered abortion and maternity benefits as options.

According to Vincent, such options are in violation of Title IX. Senate rescinded the policy and approved another policy which included abortion, maternity and out-patient care as non-optional items. Cost of the policy for one student would be $83.

The National Federation of the Blind brought the issue of its recognition before senate in an attempt to persuade the senators to overturn an Activities Board ruling denying permanent status to the federation. The Activities Board ruled the federation was discriminatory because it requires the president and a majority of the executive committee to be blind.

Senate executives submitted the bill denying the federation recognition, and cited the opinion of Casey Mahon, UI assistant to the president, and Howard Sokol, UI assistant to the vice president of academic affairs, that the federation's constitution "violates the spirit of the university human rights policy."

Debate on the issue became entangled over the question of whether the matter was a legislative one to be addressed by senate, or an interpretive one to be heard by the Student Judicial Court.

"Senate is a legislative body, not an interpretive body. The constitution says so. This should be referred to judicial court," Sen. Gary Blackford, A2, said.

However, senate President Doug Siglin, A3, said the constitution clearly states it is up to senate to uphold or overturn the Activities Board ruling.

Larry Kutcher, A4, former senate president, spoke in favor of the bill upholding the Activities Board's decision. "The body has no other option than to abide by Casey Mahon and Howard Sokol's recommendations that Activities Board is in alignment with UI policy and (state) Board of Regents policy," Kutcher said.

Sen. Woody Stodden, A4, said senate should not be a "rubber stamp" of the administration or of Activities Board.

"We have a right and a duty to question university decisions. By denying them (the federation) access to university facilities, are we possibly discriminatory?" Stodden said.

Mark Nemmers, president of the student chapter of the federation in Iowa, said the purpose of the organization is to have blind people "speak for themselves. In most organizations, sighted people represent the blind. Blind people are competent and can speak for themselves. Until there is no need for the federation, we will always need a blind leader," Nemmers said.

Debate continued and following a short recess, a motion to table the legislation and request an advisory opinion from judicial court was approved. According to Siglin, the tabled motion must be brought up again at the next meeting or it will die.

Jensey Patterson, A3, Activities Board president, said she thought the judicial court would recommend that senate not recognize the federation. "The policy is clearly in violation of university policy and Board of Regents policy, and the judicial court will recognize this," she said.

'Primitive' Africa a false image

By BILL CONROY
Staff Writer

Johnny Weissmuller thrilled millions throughout the world by swinging through the trees as Tarzan, the king of the jungle. However, he also helped to perpetuate an image of dark and primitive Africa for Africans and black Americans, according to Chengatai Zvobgo, UI assistant professor of history. Zvobgo explained how this image came about in a speech Thursday night kicking off "Resurrection of the Black Mind," a three-day conference at the UI sponsored by the Black Student Union.

Zvobgo, who is from Zimbabwe, Africa, said African culture and history was defined, until recently, by Western explorers and historians. He said the image of Africa as a dark continent "was a distortion deliberately done to achieve certain purposes."

Africa and then somehow vanished.

"They said, 'Gee, these guys (Africans) couldn't have done this,'" Zvobgo explained.

This myth of Africa as primitive and backward was harmful to black people in the United States, Zvobgo said.

"Every ethnic group in this country was proud of the country they came from except the black people," Zvobgo said.

UI administration to answer demands

By PAUL YOUNG
Staff Writer

The UI administration will answer in a week demands Thursday by the Southern Africa Liberator Support Committee that the university divest itself of stock in companies doing business with two apartheid regimes in Southern Africa.

Approximately 35 students presented a petition to four administrators present at a meeting in the Union Michigan Room. Ed Jennings, vice president for budgets, said the administration will answer the committee's demands in a week.

Committee members Thursday criticized UI stockholdings in even American-based firms including IBM, General Motors, Mobil Oil and Standard Oil. The committee called on the administration to rid itself of stock in the companies, boycott future contacts with them and issue a public statement condemning white minority rule in Southern Africa. According to committee figures, the UI and the UI Foundation own more than $500,000 in the companies' stock.

The explorer Stanley was the first to bring this bad image to Europe, Zvobgo said. "And this image was accepted by the missionaries and colonists that came. They believed it was necessary to civilize Africa — through the Bible if possible, through the machine gun if necessary."

Zvobgo said Westerners did not believe that anything had happened in Africa until the white man got there, and that this erroneous belief still persists in many history books today. When the colonists found evidence of advanced civilizations, Zvobgo said they explained them as the work of Persians or Greeks who came to

Some committee supporters became angry at the meeting that Jennings would not express an opinion on the southern Africa situation in his official capacity. The discussion then grew heated.

An African student, noting Jennings refusal to officially endorse the committee's demands, said, "If you don't support our cause it implies you support them (southern African minority rule), and it's humiliating to me."

Jennings later said that as an individual he sympathized with the black majority's struggle in southern Africa.

"We want a statement. We don't need to know your heart bleeds for them," said one observer.

Phil Jones, assistant vice president for administrative services and director of affirmative action, said any decision issued will be outlining the university's actual policy and not a "symbolic statement."

Committee member Dick Ferguson, G, after lengthy discussion between the committee and administrative representatives, said "There's been enough student input for you to make a reasonable decision."

Another meeting has been tentatively scheduled for next Friday, when, a committee member said, they plan to confront the university's investment policy in greater numbers.

The Steven Phillips and David George collections for spring are the crowning achievement of tailors who know how to blend the best of both worlds.

The quiet vested elegance of British and European fashion silhouettes with the relaxed fit and traditional good looks of American suiting. Both collections speak softly in tones of polyester and cotton or 100 per cent polyester.

This year, American good taste is as European as apple pie.

Liddy commutation testifies to injustice

E. Howard Hunt, James W. McCord Jr., Bernard Barker, Frank Sturgis. Their names read like a membership roster of the dark side of American politics. One by one, all of the Watergate burglary defendants, and two more associates, pleaded guilty to burglary and wiretapping charges, cooperated with the authorities and received lesser sentences.

All the defendants, that is, except G. Gordon Liddy. Liddy has been incarcerated since 1973 for planning the June 1972 burglary, and has remained silent about aspects of the case. This silence has earned Liddy an 18-month addition to his sentence, imposed by Federal District Judge John Sirica.

His endurance has earned him a reward of sorts: President Carter Tuesday commuted his 20-year sentence, making him eligible for parole in July. Carter commuted the sentence, an action recommended by Atty. Gen. Griffin Bell, "in the interest of equity and fairness, based on a comparison of Mr. Liddy's sentence with those of all others convicted in Watergate related prosecutions."

The argument for reducing the sentence after comparison with sentences of other Watergate participants seems logical enough. It's just that that logic is depressing. Nixon's former special counsel, Charles Colson, served seven months of an eight-year term and was then paroled. John Dean, former counsel to the President, served four months in prison and then made the best-seller list. And we'll never know how long Richard Nixon might have served, because Gerald Ford subverted the Constitutional process by pardoning a man against whom there seemed to be an excellent case for obstruction of justice.

It's a cynical comment on our society that Liddy's refusal to cop a lesser plea is one of the few gestures of responsibility and character to emerge from that group of criminals, hacks and sellouts. Liddy's conception of national security and how far the government should go to safeguard it is pretty frightening. His mentality — and a mentality shared by a great many others — has been responsible for neutralizing a number of our rights as American citizens. It is dangerous, for example, to disagree with the President because the FBI and CIA will soon know about it.

There's no sense in glamorizing Liddy's commitment to those particular principles. But the other burglars and conspirators look even shabbier than usual in comparison to Liddy.

It's disheartening that Liddy only served four years for what he did. But it's even more disheartening — and frustrating, and enraging — that the others got off with considerably less. Keeping Liddy in prison is a hollow form of "justice" when Richard Nixon is ensconced in San Clemente, chatting with David Frost for a profit. When the man most responsible for those crimes is rewarded with a pardon it's difficult to feel that justice is being served by keeping Liddy in the klink.

One of the sad lessons of Watergate has been that the Constitution works only if those in the Executive branch believe in it. God help us.

Florida defeat causes ERA regrouping

DES MOINES (UPI) — The defeat of the federal Equal Rights Amendment in the Florida Legislature Wednesday will cause supporters nationwide to regroup and fight harder for the ratification, officials of two Iowa women's groups said.

"We have 35 states already ratified and need three more for it to be an official amendment. There are 15 more which are still considering the amendment. We have until March 22, 1979 to get the necessary states," said Sue Fallon, director of the Iowa Commission on the Status of Women.

"Although I am disappointed, I don't think the amendment will be forced to die because of the Florida defeat. If anything, I think it will force those supporters to work a little bit harder and to make a little more of a concerted effort to get it passed," Ms. Fallon said.

This effort, she said, will have to go beyond just work in the states where the vote has not been taken but it will extend into states where the amendment already has been approved.

"There appears to be a concerted effort among some people to work toward the defeat of the amendment," she said.

A trend of losing has been established this year, Ms. Fallon said, and this concerns her.

"This year the amendment has been defeated in Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina and Virginia. We are going to have to work hard to keep it from happening any more."

The move to rescind the amendment in the Iowa legislature probably will not be successful this session, she said.

"It is really a hard thing to say. I think the legislators would be just as glad to go about their work and not have to deal with it," said Ms. Fallon.

But, this attitude also could have an effect on the chance for passage of an ERA for the state.

"I just don't know what the outcome on that will be. It is hard to say. As soon as I would say one thing then the opposite would happen," she said.

Norma Mathews, an official of the Iowa International Women's Year Council, agrees she doesn't see problems for the Iowa passage but is "very concerned about the outcome nationwide."

"It doesn't fare well for getting the ultimate number required for passage of the amendment. We are going to have to work harder and get more people involved if we are going to have any success," she said. "This will mean we will have to double and redouble our efforts for passage and work harder."

She said she is optimistic that the amendment can be passed. "I am hoping that Florida in its action was not typical. We will just have to get going."

Action Studies Program to get the axe

To the Editor: I have recently learned that the UI Action Studies Program (ASP) may be terminated by Dean Hubbard at the end of the summer 1977 session. The final decision will be made on May 1. I would like to say a few words in favor of the continuation of the program on a permanent basis.

I've taught several contemporary poetry and creative writing classes through ASP over the past four years. Because of the nature of ASP, a free and open department, I have been able to set up courses and activities with an ease that I haven't found anywhere else in the university. While other departments are caught up in the usual bureaucratic details of processing students and grades as smoothly as possible, ASP offers the personal approach to education. The relaxed atmosphere there encourages a person to walk right in and discuss any ideas regarding possible new approaches to programming and teaching. Naturally, the university has become a big business. The diploma is the real goal for the student and the money is the goal of the university. In ASP, however, the goal is the process of learning by teacher as well as student.

It is very discouraging to find out that Hubbard might want to end ASP. Apparently he feels that the regular university programs have absorbed all the vital qualities of ASP by simply incorporating some of its previous courses into regular university courses. That isn't true, though. Can you make a table into a chair just by sitting on it?

By sponsoring ASP, the university provides a very important service to the Iowa City community. The person who wants to teach something may do so through ASP. She-he doesn't have to wait for a paid teaching job. The person who can't afford to go to the university might find a free ASP course to take just for the sake of learning from it.

The UI is to be commended for starting the Action Studies Program. It should be allowed to keep functioning in its original way. Above all, it shouldn't be destroyed. We've all seen how urban renewal has ruined downtown Iowa City under the pretense of helping it. Is the abandonment of Action Studies a form of university renewal?

I encourage Hubbard to continue his support of education for its own sake by continuing the Action Studies Program.

Patient immaturity

To the Editor:

We have followed with amazement the current controversy over Dr. Patricia Hicks and the gynecological care at Student Health. It seems to us that few of the participants in this charade have showed much sense. Clearly Dr. Feldick over-reacted to the charges against Dr. Hicks, but this shouldn't be held against her. As for Don Dounakes, he has displayed his ignorance, first in a letter to the DI with ridiculously unsubstantiated accusation (from personal experience, we presume?) and more recently in seizing the issue so blindly and thoughtlessly that we wonder at his motives.

But here is the most disturbing part of this dispute: Unless we've missed something, nothing has been heard from the dissatisfied patients! What is their basis for comparison, if any? We have visited public health clinics, clinics run by women, free clinics and gynecologists in private practice, and few of these doctors have been as helpful or as straightforward as Dr. Hicks. We have visited her on numerous occasions and she has always taken the time to talk things over. Though we are unmarried she has never lectured nor indicated that she was concerned about our morals. We have found her to be well-informed of developments in birth control and very willing to share this information. Pelvic exams are often unpleasant, no matter who performs them. Perhaps Dr. Hicks overestimates the maturity of her patients, but we don't think her business-like attitude is devoid of sympathy. A patient has a responsibility also, and that is to make her needs and her expectations known to the doctor. If you want information, ask for it. If student nurses Hegland and Wetsch really did interview 200 dissatisfied women, the attitude of passive complaint on the part of these women is deplorable.

Not just romance — trains are a workable transportation solution

By JIM OWEN

A recent Des Moines Register poll revealed that a wide majority of adult Iowans has little or no interest in seeing increased passenger train service in Iowa today. Only one of four Iowans, according to the poll, showed a strong interest in revitalized passenger service.

It's not very surprising that most Iowans don't care about riding trains today — because most of them haven't ridden one in the past 10 years, if they've ridden one at all. And that's not surprising, either, because it's virtually impossible to board a passenger train in the state today unless you live near one of the few stops they make in the state. The city of Des Moines, for instance, does not enjoy passenger service today.

The fate of the passenger trains is a sad one for those who recall the days gone by when train travel was a prevalent mode of inter-city travel. In 1929, the nation's railroads operated some 20,000 passenger trains and carried 77 per cent of intercity passenger traffic. By 1950, more than half the passenger trains had vanished and the railroads' share of intercity traffic had fallen to 46 per cent. In 1970, just prior to the creation of the federally operated Amtrak corporation, trains carried just over 7 per cent of intercity traffic, while airlines dominated the industry with 73 per cent.

The automobile and the advent of the commercial airline were clearly responsible for the decline of the railroads in America, for better or worse. Americans were and are enthralled with the freedom that cars brought and the speed an airplane could carry them. The demands for train service continually eroded until it almost dried up. Today, just over 3 per cent of inter-city travel is done on trains.

But the country's increasing reliance upon the private automobile and the airplane as the most popular forms of travel has left the country with a serious imbalance in its transportation network.

It has become painfully evident in the past few years that we cannot rely solely upon new construction of highways and cars and jet planes to handle our growing transportation needs. The strangulation of our cities combined with a fuel shortage and environmental problems associated with highway traffic makes long-range planning for expanded highway service impractical and unacceptable. With steadily shrinking fuel reserves, the future of the internal combustion car in America grows dimmer.

As we look for more efficient modes of intercity travel, though, we are hard pressed to locate trains to take here in Iowa. Less populous states may not even have train service at all. Maybe we don't know what we're missing.

The Rail Passenger Service Act of 1970 created Amtrak and gave it authority to manage the basic national rail network and be responsible for the operation of all intercity passenger trains. Amtrak runs the show under the agreement, but it merely contracts with private railroads who still actually own much of the equipment and tracks, so rail service in the United States has not been "nationalized" in the strictest sense.

Amtrak has had considerable difficulty in its task of rejuvenating rail traffic, though. It suffered through two presidents and their cabinets who were not sympathetic to the cause and were quite reluctant to authorize the funding critically needed to upgrade the service.

Early indications, however, show that the Carter administration will be more enthusiastic about Amtrak funding.

The bigger problem is that most Americans, including Iowans, are not enthused about taking train trips around the country. Ours is a country that has been nourished for the past three decades on car and air traffic, and these old habits are not easy to break. Most Americans, quite simply, do not seem a bit anxious to ride the train from Des Moines to Boise, even if they could. The combination of limited service and periodically shabby conditions on the trains is apparently enough to scare many riders away. Not to their credit, Amtrak trains are notorious for running late or not even arriving, in large part due to the aging, faulty rollingstock and even older track and roadbeds that have not been replaced for several decades.

New equipment comes to Amtrak in bits and pieces, but Amtrak officials say it will take much greater expenditures to improve the service to the point where Americans might be more inclined toward taking the train. Amtrak currently operates at a deficit, but it seems unlikely that the deficit can be reduced until capital funding is markedly increased.

Many members of Congress are unhappy about increasing allocations to a corporation that keeps losing money. Other members are beholden to the powerful transportation lobbies of the trucking, bus and automobile industries and are not anxious to boost Amtrak funding.

Amtrak officials insist that more funding is needed to upgrade the positive "visibility" of the train service. Americans are apparently favorably impressed with newer equipment and a push is on to buy more of the red, white and blue locomotives and coaches that are Amtrak's trademark.

But Amtrak will need more than pretty trains to catch on in this country. It will probably require a major federal commitment so that train service can be expanded to include more stops and better accommodations. The trains have to offer an attractive alternative to other forms of travel if they are to ever catch on.

The lobbies for trucks, buses and airplanes often complain that expansion of train service would require excessive federal subsidies, and they are quite correct. But what they fail to point out is that their own "tracks," the highways and airports, are also heavily subsidized today. If these industries were forced to support their own facilities the way railroads are, they would be in trouble.

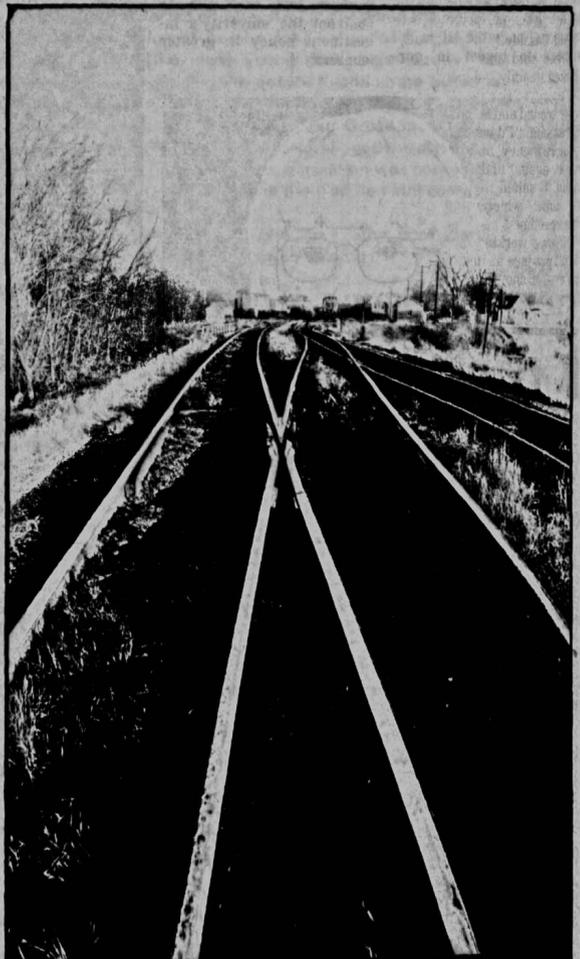

The average cost of revamping or constructing one mile of railway track in America is much less than the construction of one mile of federal highway. Lack of federal support hinders the repair efforts Amtrak has been trying to make on its 23,608 miles of track in the United States.

Amtrak has made important strides in its first five years. Ridership has increased noticeably each year, particularly in high-density population areas such as the northeast corridor of the country.

As gasoline prices climb and roads become more congested, train travel may be an unavoidable alternative for Americans who cannot afford airline tickets and dislike buses. It seems a good policy, though, to begin to upgrade train service today in preparation for the decades to come. We cannot count on the automobile much past 2,000, if that long. A reliable, safe and fast national train system has the capacity to effectively meet much of our transportation needs.

Even if you're not a romantic about taking trains and the things that go with them — the clackety-clack of the rails, drinks in the club car and overnight trips — it is likely that a train may be the only workable alternative.

Several national polls conducted over the past few years have shown that a majority of Americans favor improvements in rail passenger service, even if they don't want to ride trains. Iowans might be favorable too, if they had better and more extensive service.

Redwoods-expansion plan riles loggers

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — A truck caravan of angry loggers rolled across the Golden Gate Bridge into San Francisco Thursday to protest to a congressional committee that proposed expansion of Redwood National Park would cost thousands of jobs.

The 100-vehicle convoy, which included buses and logging trucks carrying hundreds of loggers and their families, drove 270 miles through the night for a major confrontation with environmentalists who argue expansion would preserve the historic Redwood trees.

Rep. Phillip Burton, Democratic chairman of the House national parks subcommittee and a supporter of the plan to add 74,000 acres to the disputed Redwood area, opened the hearing before a hostile crowd by conceding there would be "negative job impact."

An estimated 1,000 logger demonstrators outside the building, some communicating between their trucks with CB radios, joined their supporters in the hearing room in asserting that the ecological expansion would cost them between 3,000 and 5,000 jobs.

Republican Congressman Don Clausen, a foe of the expansion, told the hearing the new park land would put at least 2,300 persons out of work and was "unwise, unnecessary and unaffordable" because "the original park has yet to be paid for."

"I'm not here to protect the lumber companies — they'll be paid off," he said. "I'm here to protect the workers."

The environmentalists got a boost when Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus, whose jurisdiction includes the National Park Service, said Thursday in Durham, N.C., he favors the expansion — opposed by the timber industry — in order to save the trees, some of them 2,000 years old and 200 feet high. He said he recommended to President Carter that, "We have some additions around that park to protect it."

The convoy, which left at 2 a.m. from Eureka, Calif., where Burton was met by thunderous boos and an anti-expansion parade of 6,000 picketcarrying demonstrators at a hearing the day before, was kept under police surveillance as it made its way down the North Coast Highway.

It arrived at the Golden Gate at the morning rush hour, but authorities said a massive traffic jam was averted because "commuters must have got wind of the convoy before and come a little early."

Burton and other supporters of the added acreage said it is needed to protect virgin trees in the nine-year-old park. He said he was shocked when he flew over heavily-logged slopes on the edge of Redwood Park, saying the area resembled a "naked moonscape."

Ex-'Rolling Stone'-r to talk

Life as a freelancer

By MARY SCHNACK
Staff Writer

What's it like to interview David Cassidy and a Las Vegas pimp, to travel to Israel, and to have stories in the Rolling Stone and Ms.?

Robin Green, G, knows what it's like because she has done it, and she will be telling about her experiences as a freelance writer at the "Women in Media: New Horizons" conference to be held Saturday at Shambaugh Auditorium and the Communications Center.

Green, 31, was a contributing editor for the Rolling Stone from 1970-74. She said she got the job "by accident." She went to the publisher's office to apply for a job as a receptionist. "My plan was to work my way up," Green said. "They had a receptionist. So they asked me if there was anything else I could do. I told them I wrote fiction in college and I got my first assignment."

The first assignment was to cover the people who work for Marvel Comic Books in New York City where Green had worked before moving to California (Rolling Stone was then located in San Francisco). Green was paid five cents a word. "I was insulted, because five cents sounds like such a small amount," Green said. But that story made the cover of the Rolling Stone, and Green was immediately named contributing editor. Her salary was raised to 10 cents a word.

"It encourages wordiness," Green said. "My articles were always around 10,000 words, plus they (The Rolling Stone) paid traveling expenses."

"If people have talent," Green said, "they can find work. Good writers are rare." Green said the woman who was the receptionist when Green applied for that job is now an associate editor at the Rolling Stone.

Green also wrote the story that accompanied the nude photos of David Cassidy in the Rolling Stone. Green said the photographer, Anne Liebowitz, can "make anybody do anything." Green said she got a lot of hate mail after that story "from parents saying I had blown their child's illusion of David Cassidy."

Green said she "sometimes worked steadily," depending on her energy. "For me it was fun to fly around and be paid for it," Green said. "I'd wait until I had no more money, and then I'd go work again and do stories again. It suited my lifestyle at the time, which was pretty free-wheeling."

"I was working steadily. I didn't produce as fast as I could have — or should have. I did a story about every two months for a few years."

Green said a person who freelances should "organize yourself and make a business out of what you're doing." Green said it's an unsteady business, and a freelancer should work on getting book contracts and more extensive work.

The Rolling Stone had an atmosphere of a men's club when she worked there, Green said, because the only women were Liebowitz and Green. Green tells about Jann Wenner, the editor-in-chief of the Rolling Stone, who rented a hotel in Big Sur, Calif., and conducted the Rolling Stone editorial conference there.

Green showed up for the last two days of the week-long conference but, she said, she never went to any of the meetings. "There was a lot of taking of drugs and sitting in the esalen (hot springs) baths until dawn," Green said. "It was wonderful, great. Hunter Thompson, New York people and the London editors were all there."

After quitting the Rolling Stone, Green freelanced for two years before entering the UI Writers' Workshop. Qui sent Green to Israel, but she never did the story she was assigned. She had a cover story in Ms. magazine about the Inez Garcia trial. She also freelanced for several anthologies, City magazine, Gallery magazine, the Boston Real Paper, and others.

By writing 12 pornographic books in six months, Green financed her first semester at the UI. "It was scintillating and depressing," she said.

Green also teaches an undergraduate course in fiction writing. She graduates in May and will go to New York to look for work in publishing, hopefully fiction-editing, she said. She added that she'll probably do some journalism, too.

Green will speak from 2:45 to 4 p.m. at Saturday's conference, sponsored by the UI chapter of Women in Communications, Inc. (WICI). Registration for the conference is $3 all day or $1 per session.

Registration will be conducted from 8:30-9:15 a.m. in the second floor lounge of the Communications Center. The keynote address will be given at 9:30 a.m. in Shambaugh Auditorium by Judy Woodruff, NBC-TV's Washington, D.C., correspondent.

All the workshops will be held in the Communications Center. The workshops, which run concurrently, from 10:45 a.m.-noon, will consist of a newspaper panel, radio panel, public relations panel and filmmaking panel. The latter features Jane Farley, an award winning filmmaker from Milwaukee.

The Daily Iowan/Mary Look

From 1:15-2:30 p.m. Zena Beth McGlashan will speak on "Women in Management," Coleen McGee will talk about her advertising job, Pat Hirl will speak on "Combining a Law and Communications Degree" and Melissa Farlow, who was on the Pulitzer Prize-winning photography team of the Louisville Courier-Journal, will speak on photography.

Besides Green, the final set of workshops will feature Suzan Wiese, TV and radio news director from Rochester, Minn., and Cheryl Brown, who is in charge of the consumer panel for Better Homes and Gardens.

At 4 p.m. the film A Woman's Place will be shown in Shambaugh Auditorium, and the conference will conclude with a WICI meeting.

Meany: Boycott Coors

WASHINGTON (UPI) — AFL-CIO President George Meany Thursday declared a nationwide labor boycott against Coors beer, a Colorado-made beverage that has attracted a cultish following over the past decade.

Meany, 82, who seldom drinks beer, said the boycott will continue until the Adolph Coors Co. signs a new labor agreement with Brewery Workers Local 366 in Golden, Colo.

Some 1,500 brewery workers have been on strike against Coors since April 5, and the company announced earlier this week that it was about to hire replacements for the striking workers. Their previous contract expired last Dec. 31.

The Golden brewery has continued to operate at two-thirds capacity with management and supervisory personnel since the strike began.

William Coors, president of the company and a generous contributor to conservative causes, charged that the strikers were being used as "sacrificial pawns in an ideological fight" between him and the AFL-CIO.

Meany said the boycott was approved unanimously by members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council because Coors has proposed contract language that would allegedly erode the workers' existing rights.

He said the company insisted on empowering its supervisors to order any production worker to submit to a lie detector test and a physical examination. The AFL-CIO described it as "a gross violation of human dignity."

Ford's better idea — avoid Edsel

DEARBORN, Mich. (UPI) — Henry Ford II, absolute chief for 32 years of the auto company his grandfather founded, took the first step Thursday that could eventually put a non-family member at the helm of the Ford Motor Co.

Ford, 59, who suffers from heart disease, announced formation of a three-man "Office of Chief Executive" in which he, as chairman, will share power with President Lee A. Iacocca and Vice Chairman Philip Caldwell.

He said the office was created at his suggestion to "pave the way for a natural and smooth management transition at an appropriate time" for the world's second-largest auto company.

But Ford emphasized he will retain all of his authority as chairman and chief executive officer. "I'm first among equals," he said.

Ford said he would retain the dual posts of chairman and chief executive officer for at least three more years and then stay on as chairman until he reaches mandatory retirement at age 65.

Ford said he hoped a family member would always be somewhere near the top of the company his grandfather founded 74 years ago. But he admitted his son, Edsel, 29, might not be ready for a top leadership post by his retirement in September 1982.

At a news conference, Ford was reminded he assumed control from his aged grandfather when he was a year younger than Edsel. His only comment was, "Times have changed since then."

Ford appeared trim, smiling and joking with reporters in his usual manner as he puffed a cigar against doctor's orders. He said he felt good after recovering from an angina attack last year and has not seen his doctor since January.

Pressed on who he would favor as a successor, Ford would not tab either Iacocca, 52, or Caldwell, 57, as an heir apparent.

The two men sat by his side as he described the new executive setup that would take over some of his day-to-day chores. They spoke only when asked a direct question by reporters, leaving Ford—obviously still No. 1—to field most of the questions about the transition.

"The Office of the Chief Executive is designed to pave the way for a natural and smooth management transition at an appropriate time," Ford said in a statement issued after a regularly scheduled directors' meeting.

Comedy dominates summer stage

By INGRID WATERS
Staff Writer

Comedy characterizes the summer schedule of events sponsored by the Iowa Center for the Arts. Three repertory plays — Dames at Sea, The Cat and the Canary and Feiffer's People — and the comic opera Don Pasquale and an innovative dance concert compose the summer repertory bill of fare.

Dames at Sea, directed by Lou Stein, G, is an affectionate parody of the dance movie musicals of the '30s. The long-running Off-Broadway hit contains 15 musical numbers. "They run the gamut from tap dance numbers to a Busby Berkeley spectacular, with some Marx Brothers in between," Stein said.

"The plot is not as important as the style of the show," Stein said. "It takes place in a New York City theater. A girl from Utah arrives to be a star and the show unfolds from there."

Performances are scheduled for June 21, 22, 25 and 29, and July 2, 5 and 8.

For quite a change of pace, the Iowa Center for the Arts will present Don Pasquale, an opera production scheduled for July 21 and 23. Gaetano Donizetti's opera will be produced by the UI School of Music under the direction of Prof. Robert Eckert and — unlike the other events,

The Cat and the Canary, according to director Cosmo Catalano, UI professor of dramatic art, is a staple in community theaters. "It's a famous old mystery melodrama, written in the 1920s, which is also quite funny," he said. It has all the necessary ingredients of an old-fashioned mystery: "Clutching secret hands, 20-year-old wills, and an escape from an insane asylum," Catalano said.

Describing it as a bring-the-whole-family type play, Catalano was careful not to reveal too much of the plot. It seems an eccentric millionaire, to keep his greedy family from inheriting his money, leaves his estate to whomever survives him after 20 years. The play opens 20 years after his death. There are five potential heirs, but a codicil to the will specifies that if the heir should die or go insane, the next person — whose name is in another sealed envelope — gets the estate. "There is also a murder," Catalano said.

Performances are scheduled for June 21, 22, 25 and 29, and July 2, 5 and 8.

For quite a change of pace, the Iowa Center for the Arts will present Don Pasquale, an opera production scheduled for July 21 and 23. Gaetano Donizetti's opera will be produced by the UI School of Music under the direction of Prof. Robert Eckert and — unlike the other events, which will all be staged at E.C. Mable Theatre — it will be performed in Hancher Auditorium.

Don Pasquale, a rich bachelor in his 60s, has been trying to get his nephew, Ernesto, to marry a woman he has chosen. Pasquale threatens Ernesto with disinheritance if he does not do as he asks. But the boy doesn't cooperate, and Pasquale then decides to get married himself. His doctor, Malatesta, (but also a friend of Ernesto), decides to teach Pasquale a lesson. The lesson involves a woman that all three of the men know. Needless to say, the plot thickens.

The dance concert scheduled for July 14, 15 and 16, to be performed by the University of Iowa Dance Company, will be choreographed by Ann Ludwig, with production design by Eric Ulfers.

The cast for the three summer repertory plays includes Carl Apollo, Tim Clark, Barbara June Dodge, Harry Hakanson, Jim Horan, Deborah Lake, Rich Lichte, Rob Woods and Judy Zeiler. Dance concert performers and the cast for Don Pasquale have not yet been selected.

Subscription tickets priced at $6.50 for summer session students and $12 for non-students are now on sale at the Hancher box office. Individual event tickets will go on sale at a later date.

Athletes audition for scholarships

Editor's note: This is the last in a two-part series on UI women's recruiting.

By MARY SCHNACK
Staff Writer

The coaches in the Women's Athletic Department are still out looking for the top athletes who can help their teams. A few letters of intent have been signed, but most of the coaches are not saying what athletes they are encouraging to come to the UI.

Gymnastics Coach Tapa Haronoja will hold an audition today and Friday. Prospective high school students, who hope to get a scholarship to the UI, will come to work out in front of Haronoja. Haronoja had four team members on scholarship this year and none of them are graduating. She has two scholarships available for incoming freshman students. She said there is "one excellent in-state candidate, two from Illinois, one from Arizona and a number from surrounding states."

Tennis Coach Joyce Moore had two recruits on campus last week. Moore said the recruit from Massachusetts decided not to sign a letter of intent but that the recruit from New York is seriously considering the scholarship offer. Moore had five players on scholarship this year and has two available for incoming freshman students.

Two golf scholarships are "open to everyone," and one is for a transfer student, Golf Coach Diane Hertel said. Hertel said the two scholarships are primarily for incoming freshman students. Elena Callas from Moline, Ill., who is one of the top 10 high school golfers in Illinois and has participated in a lot of national junior tournaments, has signed a letter of intent, Hertel said. Eleven golfers are on the spring squad.

Women in recruiting

Ten scholarships are available for track and six of the 10 are available for incoming freshman students, according to Track Coach Jerry Hassard. Only two women on the track team are now on scholarship, Hassard said. One scholarship has already been given to Denise Kintzel, a senior at Benton Community School in LuVerne, Iowa. Kintzel recently won the high jump at the Iowa state indoor track meet, was all-state in cross-country and is what Hassard calls an "all-around girl." Hassard said he is recruiting many women from out of state, including two from the New York area, one in Wisconsin and two from Rhode Island.

Basketball Coach Lark Birdsong had seven women on basketball scholarships this year and has three or four more scholarships to give out. Birdsong said at least two of the scholarships will be for incoming freshman students and "some would have to go to transfers." Birdsong, who can award 10 scholarships, is recruiting women from Florida, Wisconsin, Illinois and one from Iowa.

Robin Reif, from Madison, Wisc., has signed a letter of intent for a swimming scholarship. Swimming Coach Deborah Woodside said Reif won first place in the 100-meter butterfly in the Wisconsin high school meet and swam on relays. Woodside said Reif is probably the "outstanding flyer coming out of Wisconsin." Ten scholarships are available to the swimming team and Woodside plans to use two of them for incoming freshman students. She said she is trying to get "flyers and all-around athletes that can participate in a variety of events."

Four field hockey scholarships will be awarded to upperclass students next year and four to freshman students, Coach Margie Greenberg said. She said once a player receives a scholarship, she will stay on it. Two women from the New York area already have signed letters of intent.

Suzanne Humphrey is an offensive player who was named all-conference, Greenberg said. The other signee is Kelly Flanagan from Owego, N.Y. Greenberg described her as a "super athlete" who excels in hockey and softball. Greenberg said Flanagan is coming on a hockey scholarship, but will participate in both sports. Flanagan is an offensive line player, Greenberg said.

Greenberg will save one scholarship to be awarded this fall.

Softball Coach Jane Hagedorn is looking for a pitcher, shortstop and outfielder to fill the three scholarships she has available for incoming students. Hagedorn has seven women on scholarships now. She said she has offered a scholarship to one pitcher and may offer another scholarship to a pitcher. One-third of the women she is recruiting are from Iowa and the rest are from out of state, she added.

Connie Bandy from Dubuque, Iowa, has accepted a scholarship for volleyball, according to Coach Shirley Finnegan. Finnegan said she has five scholarships available for the fall, three of those for incoming freshman students. Amy Pontow, Park Ridge, Ill., came to the UI to audition and is considering a letter of intent, Finnegan said. "Physical skill and personal character" are the main attributes for which Finnegan is searching.

All the coaches stressed they would not award all of their scholarships unless they find athletes who are qualified for them.

Rummells adjusts easily to golf course, team

By JUSTIN TOLAN
Assoc. Sports Editor

For a newcomer, Dave Rummells has had little trouble adjusting to Iowa's Finkbine Golf Course.

"It's nice and long — the way I like 'em," noted Rummells, a freshman who 20-year Coach Chuck Zwiener sees as making an immediate contribution to the Hawkeyes.

All Rummells did last year (while a senior at West Branch High School) was shoot a 67 to top his nearest challenger by some "four or five strokes." And he accomplished this in spite of only playing Finkbine "once or twice."

Nevertheless, two-time Class A champion Algonia Garrigan nipped West Branch on the final hole.

"I think they (Garrigan) are in a different class this year," said Rummells, a husky pre-business student sporting a UI sportshirt. "We won't have to worry."

"Although he has never had a golf lesson in his life, Rummells' association with the ancient Scottish game even prefaced his kindergarten education.

"I started when I was about four," he noted, adding that the one-mile distance from his home to the West Branch Country Club was never an obstacle to his playing time. "Dad plays but he started late. He was 25 or 30 when he started."

Rummells admitted he has relied on golf magazines, particularly Golf Digest, to supplement his game. Tom Watson, victor in the recent Masters Tournament, is his favorite pro.

His hobbies include fishing, basketball, and one right down his own fairway — collecting golf balls.

"I've gotten 3,000 since I was five," he said. "I still hunt for them once in a while on days when there aren't many people out golfing."

Making the meet-by-meet cut is pretty competitive against such upperclassmen as Nigel

Burch, Ross DeBuhr and Julius Boros, Jr., who average 76.5, 77.3 and 78.3, respectively. But Rummells held his own Tuesday under windy and dry conditions at the Iowa triangular, carding rounds of 78 and 83.

"He'll be ready next week," Zwiener said after the Illini Classic in which his Hawks finished 12th. Zwiener, who was disappointed with the high scores there, added, "If you're going to play bad do it now before the Big Tens."

Zwiener says Iowa would have to be considered a darkhorse threat to unseat defending champion Ohio State and Indiana, the pre-season Big Ten favorites. The Hawks, who have never won the title, jumped from ninth to fifth last year and with Dave Rummells around for four years, that ascent can only be made easier.

Pinball, anyone?

By a Staff Writer

Whether you become part of the machine, play by intuition or just need therapy from studies is all secondary to the chance to become the Pinball Wizard Champion of the UI and garner all the bountiful glories that go along with it.

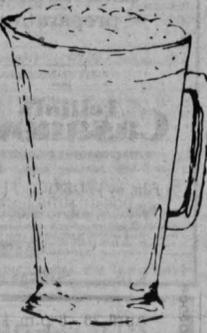

Registration continues today and Monday for students, faculty and staff at the recreation desk in the Union for the competition to take place from 3-8 p.m. April 19 at the Wheelroom. An entry fee of $1 will be used to offset the tourney costs.

"The top total scorer after three games on one machine is the winner," explained Jim Hultine, tournament co-sponsor. "T-shirts will also go to the top two."

In addition, first and second place student winners will be sent to Des Moines for the state championship, where awards include $100 first prize in quarters and $50 second prize in quarters.

Free popcorn will be dispensed to all participants and fans between 4 and 8 p.m. on tourney day.

You can flip over it, but you shouldn't tilt.

In Big Ten action

Tracksters home; baseball, tennis away

By the DI Sports Staff

The men's track team faces one of its stiffest challenges of the season Saturday when they entertain the Wisconsin Badgers in a Big Ten dual meet. Field events for the meet will begin at 1 p.m. while the running events are scheduled to get underway on the Recreation Building outdoor track at 1:30 p.m.

Wisconsin, a perennial power in Big Ten track circles, will be led by distance man Steve Lacy. Earlier in the year, Lacy blazed to an 8:31.9 finish over two miles, an all-time Big Ten undergraduate best.

Iowa has been hampered in recent weeks by injuries to key performers. High jumper Bill Hansen, the reigning Big Ten outdoor champion who has been nagged by injuries all year, hurt his back lifting weights last week, and versatile freshman William McCalister has been battling the effects of a hamstring pull suffered two weeks ago in the cold at Western Illinois.

"They're both questionable for Saturday," Coach Francis Cretzmeyer said. "It'll all depend on what the trainer says Friday."

Two-miler Chuck Berger and middle-distance man Dave Zittman will also attempt to shake off their ailments in time for Saturday's meet.

Cretzmeyer is anticipating a good race in the mile, where he is planning on running the trio of Steve Pershing, Joe Paul and Joel Moeller. Moeller started the season strong for the Hawkeyes and has shown no signs of letting up. The Iowa record-holder in the 1,000-yard run, he has anchored Iowa's swift distance-medley relay all year.

That quartet, consisting of Moeller, Tom Slack, Jim Docherty, and alternately, Pershing or Paul, earlier won the relay at the Illinois Classic and the Florida Relays. They also have a fourth-place finish in the NCAA indoor championships to their credit.

Things look even more promising for the future, as Docherty, Pershing and Moeller are all juniors, while Slack and Paul are only sophomores.

Saturday's meet will give fans their only opportunity of the year to see the Hawkeyes at home on the outdoor oval. The Hawkeyes will compete at the Illini Classic next weekend before taking part in the Drake Relays April 29-30 in Des Moines.

Tennis

If you notice an unusual amount of activity on the tennis courts adjacent to the library today and Saturday, it's only because an unusual event is in progress.

It's the Iowa Invitational Women's Tennis Tournament and the top players from Western Illinois, Drake and Minnesota will be competing today at 10 a.m. and continuing through the day, and starting again at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The players representing Iowa will be Joy Rabinowitz, Linda Madvig, Becky Seaman, and Beth Zelinskas. The meet will move to the Recreation Building in the case of rain.

The men's tennis team, 3-0 in the Big Ten, travels to Iowa State today for a warm-up match before meeting Minnesota on Saturday. Last year's Iowa State team surprised Iowa by winning a match. It will be a greater surprise if they manage it again.

Baseball

Although Iowa boasts the best record of any of the Big Ten baseball teams so far this season, the slate will be wiped clean this weekend when the Hawks open the conference schedule and start playing for higher stakes.

Coach Duane Banks' team, riding a 10-game winning streak, will take its 20-5 record and .347 batting average to Michigan State on Saturday and Michigan on Sunday in a big four-game weekend.

Michigan is the defending conference champion and will be the first major test for the Hawks to prove that they aren't only mere pretenders to the Big Ten crown. Before Michigan hosts Iowa, however, the Wolverines will open against Minnesota, another strong contender for the league title.

Banks said he will start Bob Stepp and Craig Van Syoc against Michigan State, which compiled a 7-7 record down South, and then will throw his two aces, Mike Boddicker and Steve Rooks, against the 10-6 Wolverines.

"This is a big weekend for us, but right now we're looking no further than Michigan State. After we're past them then we can start worrying about Michigan," Banks said.

Banks has had little to worry about so far this season as his pitchers have steadily improved since the southern swing and the Hawkeye hitters have been mutilating opponents at the rate of 9.3 runs per game.

Despite winning the last 10 games, Iowa has dropped to 26th in the Collegiate Baseball poll, after being rated 17th in the magazine's first poll. The Texas Longhorns, sporting a 39-1 record, have been tabbed as the nation's top team.

Sophomore Jim Cahalan prepares to loft the shot put, his specialty. Cahalan, who has recorded his personal best, will join other members of Coach Francis Cretzmeyer's track squad in hosting Big Ten rival Wisconsin Saturday, beginning at 1 p.m.

Richards teams with King

PORT WASHINGTON, N.Y. (UPI) — Billie Jean King and transsexual Renee Richards were scheduled to play doubles together for the first time Thursday night as the top-seeded pair in the $20,000 Lionel Cup tennis tournament.

Richards, who is fighting for acceptance from the Women's Tennis Association, which King helped form, and the United States Tennis Association to play as a woman, is hoping the fact she is playing with the influential Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion will boost her cause.

King and Richards were scheduled to meet the team of Patti Shoolman, Fairport, N.Y., and Aleida Spex, Miami, Fla., Thursday night.
