Health care cost bill close rural hospitals

BY DAVID JACOBS

Administration-proposed federal ceilings on hospital rate increases might hit 10 billion in hospital expansion plans and later projects in rural hospitals, which serve many poor patients, officials say.

Many smaller hospitals might have to cut back on hospital expansion plans, Carter said. The Carter administration estimates that a 10 billion ceiling on hospital rate increases would save 10 billion in capital outlays for hospital construction and equipment.

The federal ceiling on cost increases might apply to all hospital expansion plans, Carter added. Long-term care facilities, such as nursing homes, would be subject to the same ceilings on their rate increases.

Under the ceiling, hospitals would be allowed to absorb an additional amount of capital costs that exceed the 10 billion limit per year. The ceiling would be calculated on a per capita basis from the hospital's costs for large and small hospitals.

No increase in the funds that hospitals receive for capital costs, which would exceed the 10 billion ceiling, would be allowed.

For example, the ceiling on capital costs for hospital construction in 1979 would be calculated by subtracting the projected capital costs in 1978 from the hospital's 1979 costs, then using the remainder for capital costs.

The ceiling, which would be calculated on the basis of a per capita basis, would apply to all hospitals, regardless of size.

The ceiling on capital costs would be lower than the 10 billion per capita limit.

The ceiling applies to all hospitals except those with a 10 billion limit on capital outlays for hospital construction and equipment.

Inflation costs are particularly true in light of Mercy's situation, according to Mercy Hospital officials.

McGill said a 10 billion ceiling would be fair to everyone and would have no impact on the hospital's ability to operate.

"Our problem is severe, but the ceiling would make things worse," McGill said.

Higher fees mean more animals destroyed

BY CAROL JOHNS

There has been an increase in the number of dogs and cats being killed in shelters. The higher pet adoption fees have been initiated at the local animal control centers. These fees were increased during the financial year, and the increase was reported to be $40 million over, compared to $50 during the same period last year. This increase will be used to fund both animals that were not used to be in research and other purposes. Although, the recent animal control has been raised by the Iowa City council because the animal is restricted by a "man." The animal shelter is operated with the budget of both departments. However, there have been no instances in which the budget has been raised by the Iowa City council. In the coming week, the Iowa City Animal Shelter is permitted outside, only in the morning. The council is also at the shelter. The shelter is restricted by a "man." The animal shelter is operated with the budget of both departments. However, there have been no instances in which the budget has been raised by the Iowa City council.

Medicaid

Nursing homes and residential care facilities in several states receiving Medicaid funding for the elderly are being audited to see if they have constructed expensive and large-scale modifications of their buildings to comply with the new federal regulations. The states, in continuing to receive the funds, must conduct regular audits to see if the new Federal regulations are being followed.

Now, along with other states, is refusing to accept federal intervention, Iowa has also refused to make an inspection of Medicaid home staffing required by July 1, 1977, and it intends to rely on nonprofessional staff. State administrators have stated that the work would not be given to professionals. Allowing the handicapped is a laudable goal and not a decision which should be left to the discretion of the states, but these federal regulations are intended to make sure that correct procedures are followed. Iowa's decision would thus be against the federal regulations and would be viewed as illegal. A brief is being written to this effect.

The Dally

To the Editor:

Iowa has refused to accept federal intervention in their Medicaid program, stating that they have their own nonprofessional staff and feel that this would not necessarily result in a better standard of care. The state of Iowa is refusing to conduct any inspections of the facilities which continue to receive Medicaid money and has decided that Federal regulations should be disregarded.

Iowa's decision is in contrast to the federal regulations which require that states receiving Medicaid funding for the elderly must conduct regular audits to see if the new Federal regulations are being followed. The states that continue to receive the funds must show that they have construct expensive and large-scale modifications of their buildings to comply with the new federal regulations. The states are continuing to receive the funds, but must conduct regular audits to see if the new Federal regulations are being followed.

My colleague, Ted Wilson, of the New York Times, has written an article warning of the dangers of allowing states to conduct their own inspections of nursing homes and residential care facilities. He argues that this is an example of the states trying to cover up their own problems and that it is not in the best interest of the patients. He also states that the Federal government should take a more active role in ensuring that the states are following the regulations.

Wilson points out that the states are trying to cover up their own problems by conducting their own inspections, and that this is not in the best interest of the patients. He argues that the Federal government should take a more active role in ensuring that the states are following the regulations.

Singles increasing

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The number of long living alone has increased 89 per cent in the last seven years and the number of women by themselves is up 116 per cent, the Census Bureau said.

Among persons under 25, the number of men living alone tripled since 1970 - from 274,000 to 852,000, and the number of women doubled from 387,000 to 735,000.

"There were 11.3 million persons contributing household income, or 9.1 per cent of the total households, in 1973. Of these, 2.7 per cent were single family households, or 0.3 million families, two-thirds of them living in urban areas and only 4 per cent of farms."

The Census Bureau's annual observations on individuals living alone show that the trend has continued without a let up, the bureau said.

In 1973, sons Mowre have had a great deal of money saving. They are also the result of the growing of the singles, and their numbers are expected to increase in the years to come.

The bureau says a family is two people.
