Lance bank prospers

More than $5 billion in federal savings deposits — an unusually deep amount — were left unclaimed in the nation's banks last year, and the number of unclaimed balances has probably doubled since 1984, according to a new study released by a coalition of consumer groups.

The study, conducted by the Center for Responsible Banking and the American Bankers Association, found that more than $5 billion in savings deposits are unclaimed each year, and that the number of accounts with unclaimed balances has increased by about 50 percent since 1984.

The study, based on data from the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, found that more than 1.5 million accounts were closed in 1984, and that the number of accounts with unclaimed balances increased by about 50 percent since 1984.

The study also found that the average unclaimed balance is about $10,000, and that the number of accounts with unclaimed balances has increased by about 50 percent since 1984.

The study is the first to look at the issue of unclaimed savings deposits, and it is expected to be of interest to policymakers and consumer advocates.

The study is available for download on the Center for Responsible Banking's website.

Young kids, veterans all old timers

By JAY WALLACE

Although his classical violin aspirations are now a distant memory, Guy Drollinger, 25, of Iowa City, still plays with the same passion he did when he was bopping along at the Johnson County 4-H grounds Sunday afternoon at the annual Friends of Old Time Music Festival.

"I studied classical violin for about 10 years and my grandfather taught me to play fiddle to entertain the kids who think that long-hair kids are the devil," Drollinger said. "I won't even listen to the radio today. Nowadays you can listen to country or rock but never hear good old time music."

"That was 73 years ago, but Drollinger's fiddlers still play enough to keep the music alive, which is demonstrated with different fiddle, mandolin, and banjo players gathered on the hillside and the white bearded banjo player and his hard look at the people who play by ear."

"The really important thing is that they both play violin. People think there's a difference between the two, but the only difference is in the people who teach them," Drollinger explained.

Aid, a graduate student at the UI, emphasized that he was both styles of music. He said that fiddling is an art form that needs to be passed on to future generations.

"I picked it up as a boy and have played it all of my life," Drollinger said. "I started playing fiddle when I was 7 years old. I've been playing bluegrass since 1966. Playing at 8 - 9 o'clock, I had every instrument at the radio."

"My grandfather has traced the family back to Germany," Drollinger said. "His great-great grandfather was a fiddler and his great-great-great-grandfather was a fiddler."

"I think that this is a great event for all of us, and I think that we should keep it up," Drollinger said.

Refusal to recognize NFB supported by Student Code

RBS urges lecture committee to reconsider funding policy

The demand regarding recognition of the National Federation of Blind (NFB) has been a decades-long battle for the right to recognition by the university. The "Code of Student Life" states explicitly that the university recognizes the NFB as a student organization. However, the university has recently decided not to recognize the NFB, citing reasons such as the organization's political affiliation or concerns about the funding process. This decision has caused a significant amount of controversy and debate among the students and the university administration.

Legal death issue gets new life

HANSON, Wis. — A 51-year-old Wisconsin man who claims he’s been legally declared dead and resurrected himself is now pursuing a lawsuit aiming to prove he was legally killed.

Vernon H. Fitchett Jr. was declared dead in 2005 and has since been living in a Wisconsin nursing home. He’s hoping to prove he was wrongfully declared dead.

Fitchett’s case is just the latest in a string of legal battles over the right to die. In 2012, a federal court ruled in favor of a 67-year-old Oregon woman who wanted to end her life. The court ruled that a person has the right to die if they are terminally ill and request it in writing.

DOONESBURY

Homer said he was preparing to die, but the decision was made for him. He was able to say "Che" at the last minute. At 8 a.m., he died of complications from pneumonia and congestive heart failure.

The death was unexpected. Homer had been in good health until this week, when he was admitted to a local hospital with fever and shortness of breath. He was diagnosed with pneumonia and congestive heart failure on Monday, and he died early Tuesday morning.

Homer’s family said he was a kind and loving man who loved his family and friends. They said he was always there for them, whether it was in times of need or just to have fun.

Women harriers third at Missouri
The Iowa women's cross country team finished third in a meet that ended with Earle Campbell's touchdown.

"Our attitude the past week wasn't too good," Shannon said. "We were dissatisfied just before we were shocked."

The University of Iowa had never won a track and field national championship. Now, with three national titles, the Hawkeyes have reason to be proud. But, as usual, they have reason to be cautious. These women have a great deal to prove in the next few years.

Badgers move on Big Two

CHICAGO (11) - A win in the Big Ten championship was the final goal of the season for the Michigan State University women's basketball team. But a huge victory was the first goal for the Northwestern University women's basketball team. The Wolverines defeated the Wildcats 80-75.

The Big Ten tournament was held in Chicago's Civic Center. The Wolverines were considered the underdogs in the tournament. They had finished the regular season with a record of 11-10, while the Wildcats had a record of 21-2. But the Wolverines proved to be the better team.

"I can't say anything in particular," said Michigan State head coach Greg Bealer. "I think we have a good team and we played well and we were lucky.

Tennis team drops two

The Iowa women's tennis team lost 2-3 to Illinois on Thursday. The team's record is now 5-0 for the season. The team's next match is against Northwestern on Friday.

"We had a tough weekend," said Iowa coach Jerry Hassard. "We had enough depth to win two matches and we lost two.

Hired Coach Tom Vanbuskirk has announced the hiring of a new assistant coach, Jack Hall.

Hall has been a part of the coaching staff at Iowa State University for the past five years. He was with the Cyclones when they won the NCAA Championship in 1979.

"I'm looking forward to working with Jack," Vanbuskirk said. "He brings a lot of experience and knowledge to the team.
