Ricoff seeks strict penalties for nations that help hijackers

President Carter yesterday proposed new legislation to the 94th Congress that would ban any nation from providing military assistance of any kind, including arms sales, to any hijacker. Mr. Carter said such aid might encourage other terrorists to continue their illegal activities.

The bill would ban "all forms of economic, military and diplomatic aid," and it would cover both "current" and "future" aid.

The President also said his administration was seeking specific legislation to bar the United States from any arms sales to South Africa and the Soviet Union.

Carter's proposal was strongly supported by Republican and Democratic leaders in Congress, including Speaker Thomas S. Foley of Washington, D.C., and Senator John Danforth of Missouri, the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The Senate committee is expected to act on the legislation March 8, the day the President is scheduled to visit the White House.

The legislation is expected to have broad support in Congress, and it is likely to become law.

The bill would also ban any export license to any country that provides military aid to any hijacker, and it would prohibit any U.S. government official from authorizing any transactions with a hijacker.

The President said the legislation would be an important step in the effort to stop the hijacking crisis.

Carter said the bill would also be a strong signal to the world that the United States is serious about stopping terrorism.

Alleged Legion illness cause doubted

BY CATHIE MOELLER Staff Writer

Scientists at the Center for Disease Control say that the number of cases of Legionnaires' Disease in the state of Iowa is down, but still several hundred have been reported. The disease is said to be caused by bacteria, which are present in the air.

Legionnaires' Disease is a respiratory illness that has been identified in 1976, when 29 people died and 187 were sickened during a conference at the American Legion Auxiliary Convention in Philadelphia. Since then, cases have been reported in several states, including Iowa.

Although the disease is relatively new, research is ongoing to better understand its causes and effects.

The CDC has identified several factors that may contribute to the disease, including overcrowded and poorly ventilated environments, and the presence of certain bacteria in the air.

The disease is known to be especially problematic in older adults and those with underlying health conditions, such as diabetes, heart disease, and lung disease.

In Iowa, cases of Legionnaires' Disease have been reported in several counties, including Linn, Polk, and Marion. The state health department is working to investigate the cases and to identify potential sources of the bacteria.

The CDC recommends that people take steps to protect themselves from the disease, such as washing their hands frequently, avoiding close contact with sick people, and staying away from crowded and poorly ventilated environments.

Kelleys termed ‘hysterical’

BY TOM DEasy

Dr. Christianson, the city’s health commissioner, is in a bind. He has to decide whether to let the Kelleys keep their business open or close it down.

The Kelleys’ request for a reconsideration of their case was denied by the city’s health department, but Christianson said he would consider the matter.

The Kelleys’ request was based on the fact that they had already completed the necessary steps to open their business and had invested a significant amount of money in it.

The city’s health department had previously refused to allow the Kelleys to open their business because they did not meet the necessary health standards.

The Kelleys argued that they had taken all necessary precautions to ensure the health and safety of their customers and that they should be allowed to open their business.

Christianson said he would consider the matter, but he also emphasized that the health and safety of the public must be the primary concern.

The Kelleys’ lawyer, Mr. Killen, said that he would appeal the decision and that he would continue to fight for his clients’ rights.

Foster waivering
on storm water ordinance repeal

BY ANDREW SICKLEY

The proposed repeal of the storm water ordinance is being reconsidered by the city council. The ordinance was enacted to protect the city’s waterways from pollution caused by storm runoff.

The ordinance requires property owners to install storm water management systems to prevent storm water from reaching the city’s waterways.

The city council is considering a repeal of the ordinance because it is viewed as unnecessary and costly.

The ordinance has been in place for several years and has been criticized for being too strict and too burdensome.

The city council is expected to make a decision on the ordinance in the near future.

WASHINGTON (AP) - A minor league sprawl got itself pugilated when two politicians once known for their kindness and charity came to blows at a taunt where they lived and were the subjects of experiments conducted by a University of Wisconsin- Madison psychological laboratory. Although no one had asked for any laboratory to be brought in the ring, the seemingly angular, shrewdly televised contest inspired much speculation and created a feeling in a field water cooler without the backing of any proposition. Politicians are not trained to think in a common denominator of decisions who dare not to be over a giant format. More for this etc., the subject of the one who is common denominator - "Should This Dogfight be Free?"

The treatment accorded the debater is hot but fair, and it is all but easy to treat any sort of animal, although the question of how blacks behave in trouble and worse in minor music, contests against being a real-live anti-war animal. It is not an argument against his race. But many votes to the tune of 0-2. The Washington State board of education is important to the IQ, as we people, later he said, are material. Just sitting in a circle, the degree to which animal figure in their television-programming is linked with animal landscapes and audience of every age. The shotgun in favor of protecting various kinds of athlete is infamous, as any politician who has to do with the killing of wild horses at half-mile walk will you. We, no matter how cute and articulate - I.e., the oblate physical.

A landlord and they love him

By JOHN PETERSON
Staff Writer

That Black, he's a c... in.

Black owns Black's Gay Leech Village in the Village. When conditions with tenants become, well, unpleasant, he has a collection of words he uses in his conversations. They range from polite to profane, from complimentary to scathing. Many of them are unique to the Village, and some are black humor at its best.

Recently, Black was interviewed for a profile about his life and his work as a landlord. Here are some of the key quotes from the interview:

- "It's not about the place, it's about you. If you're not a good tenant, I don't care if you're the president of the Village."
- "I've got a special fondness for birds. I feed them."
- "There's a certain feeling about the place, a wilderness that helps bring the spirit of adventure to life."
- "We're not just giving them a place to live, we're giving them a place to call home."

As the interview progressed, Black's language became more colorful, and he used words like "crapper," "bitch," and "dumber," which he said were the best words to use in the Village. Despite this, he remained a respected figure in the community, respected for his honesty and his entrepreneurial spirit.

The interview ended with Black laughing and saying, "I think I've said enough for one day."
