Local dam hazardous but sound

The Coralville Dam was placed on a high potential hazard list for the U.S. because of the dam's potential for causing severe damage, according to a Corps of Engineers report published Wednesday.

Careville Dam

The Corps of Engineers has estimated the potential flooding that could be caused by the dam during a 100-year flood. The report shows that the dam could cause up to 86 feet of water to flow over the dam during a 100-year flood. The report also states that the dam could cause up to 200 feet of water to flow over the dam during a 100-year flood.

In November, a preliminary hearing on the rape charge is scheduled for Nov. 15. The Iowa Nurses Association (INA) may file a prohibited practice charge because the hospital, according to Jim McClimon, the health services director, and ordered by several hospital department and unit heads, was inadequate for caring for patients. "We felt that the hospital administration had done a good job," he said.

"They have not said that the state allows these practices to go on," McClimon said. "We have not said they are a good job.

McKerny also questioned the hospital's decision to assign patients' lawyers to represent them in legal disputes. "We were told that patients' lawyers were "step employees" from the hospital, which is what we think," McClimon said.

The hospital's policy of having a legal representative for each patient was "a culmination of several sessions, which covered employee rights, personnel policies and collective bargaining agreements," McClimon said. "We were told that the state collective bargaining law allows hospitals to have collective bargaining representatives for employees in work sites, a practice that hospitals often use to create a collective bargaining agreement.

According to McClimon, the INA does not consider the existence of a lawyer to be a violation of the hospital's collective bargaining agreements. McClimon said that during the collective bargaining process, the hospital's staff members "must" have access to a lawyer, and that the hospital's policy is to ensure that all employees are represented by a lawyer. McClimon added that the INA believes that the existence of a lawyer is necessary for the hospital to fulfill its obligations under the collective bargaining agreements.

UI nurses resent attempt to thwart unionization

Heroin

With obvious jest, President Carter Monday joined his administration's attempts to control the heroin trade with a severe targeted restriction on the importation of pharmaceutical opiates. The move appears to be a major step in the battle against the spread of drug addiction.

Under the new rules, the import of most pharmaceutical drugs that contain opium and other opiates would be severely restricted. The rules would also prohibit the import of any drug that could be used for the manufacture of heroin or other opioids.

The new restrictions were announced by Under Secretary of Health and Human Services Peter N. Robinson, who called the move "an important step in the fight against drug addiction.

The new rules come in response to a growing concern among health officials that the drug trade is fueling a surge in opiate addiction, particularly among young people. The move is expected to reduce the availability of these drugs and to limit their impact on the illegal drug market.

The new rules are expected to take effect in the near future and are likely to be challenged in court. Industry officials have warned that the restrictions could harm legitimate businesses and could lead to a black market for these drugs.

The move is part of a broader effort by the administration to combat the drug epidemic. The administration has already taken a number of steps to address the issue, including increasing funding for drug treatment programs and raising awareness about the dangers of drug use.

The new rules are likely to be met with mixed reactions from various groups. Some experts have praised the move for its potential to reduce drug addiction, while others have expressed concern about the impact on legitimate businesses.

The move is also likely to be met with legal challenges,

as the restrictions are likely to be challenged in court.

The administration has a long history of attempting to combat drug addiction, but the effectiveness of its efforts has been questioned by many. The new rules are expected to represent a significant step in the battle against drug addiction, but it remains to be seen whether they will be effective in curbing the epidemic.

Watergate tape sales 'will embarrass Nixon'

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Tuesday the White House will not sell excerpts from the White House tapes unless a federal court orders them to be sold. Effective immediately, Rumsfeld said, the government will begin to examine the tapes.

The Justice Department reviewed the tapes earlier in the week and decided that there was no greater national security threat presented by the tapes than was presented by other presidential tapes.

The White House declined to comment on the move, which is likely to increase the public's interest in the tapes and to increase pressure on Nixon to release them.

Legal experts say the tapes are likely to be released, but they are not sure how much they will be released.

The government is also considering whether to release other tapes, including those related to the Watergate scandal and the Iran-Contra affair.

The tapes are likely to be released in the coming weeks, but the government is still considering whether to release them.

Physicians, professors top status list

NEW YORK (UPI) — Money and other material advantages bear a dead and private circle are no longer in cases of status in the 1970's, a UCLA sociologist says.

Tommy Franklyn, 38, associate professor of sociology at the University of Southern California, said that a new generation of people, who are not as interested in prestige as those in the past, are concentrating on the job rather than the status of the job.

Trotman's own research into the sociology of social science research, he said, found that people in the 1970's are more likely to choose a career that offers a sense of achievement and fulfillment rather than one that is prestigious.

Friends say alligator died from heartbreak

TVAFLA (UPI) — Albert the alligator is dead and although reports are out, Florida's Crocodile and Fresh Water Fish Commission officially says they have no idea of a broken heart.

His friends say he did.

Albert, who was estimated to be a mid-sized alligator, took a ride in Florida's Everglades National Park, but had not been seen since.

Albert's body was found in the Everglades earlier in the week, but the cause of death remained unknown.

Albert's owner, a wildlife conservationist, said the alligator was killed by a dog, but the owner is not sure.

"He didn't have friends," the owner said.

"He was a good alligator, and he will be missed," the owner added.

Albert, known as the Everglades County sheriff's alligator in the '70s and '80s, was known to be a bit of a troublemaker.

"I don't think they had any feelings," he said.

"And the people loved it," she added.

"I'm glad he's gone," she said.
