Clark: Energy bill ready for okay

By Paul Young

The first part of a compromise energy package that would deregulate natural gas prices for the next 15 years and allow for President Carter's cap on interest rates for the federal government was released Saturday at the Democratic National Convention in Miami.

The bill, which was called for when the House passed it last week, and which Carter signed on Friday, would allow interest rates for the federal government to rise four per cent above the general level for the next 15 years.

Carter said the bill was completely satisfactory with the bill, and that it would become effective immediately after its signing.

The Senate energy package that Van Nostrand, Gordon Holmes, and Delano Johnson suggested last year would allow gas prices to rise four per cent above the general level for the next 15 years.

Carter said the bill would be made effective immediately after its signing.

Uniform tuition for grads as well?

The UI may be forced to implement uniform tuition rates for both graduate and non-graduate students, raising the question whether this would be an acceptable step in the fight against higher tuition costs. However, this may not be as simple as it seems, as the different programs and courses offered by the university may require different levels of expertise and specialization.

The present scheme of providing academic awards often demands a complex analysis of individual factors, such as the difficulty level of the course, the student's academic performance, and the potential for future contributions to the field. This scheme may need to be adjusted to better reflect the value of each student's unique contribution to the academic community.

The justifications for admitting grad students to UI are often based on their potential to make significant contributions to the field. However, it is important to ensure that these justifications are based on objective criteria and that the selection process is transparent and fair to all students.

The question of whether grad students should be charged higher tuition than undergraduates is still under debate. While it may be fair to charge grad students more based on the assumption that they will be more productive in the future, it is also important to consider the potential for undergraduates to make significant contributions to the field.

In conclusion, the question of uniform tuition for all students is a complex one that requires careful consideration. While it may be fair to charge grad students more based on their potential, it is important to ensure that the selection process is fair and transparent to all students.
What is ballet without bourgeoisie?

Joyce Reeds

There was no ballet very long ago because there never was one — at least not in the style we think of today. Or, at least, there was no ballet performed by people who were not wealthy, powerful, and polite. But today, ballet is performed by people from all walks of life. Some are rich, some are poor, some are famous, some are not. It is not just for the rich, just for the famous, just for the powerful. It is for everyone.
