The U.S. State Department on Tuesday threatened to suspend the Panama Canal treaty if the Panama Canal is not reopened. The United States said it would take six years to rebuild the canal, and in that period of time intercession would not be to defend the canal.

Treaty ratified; Carter 'jubilant'

WASHINGrON (UPI) - In a brass-rivet ritual that sealed the end of a 15-year battle, Panamanians Tuesday ratified the Panama Canal treaty 87-1. The treaty was ratified by the Senate at 3:00 p.m. today, concluding the last day of the 83rd Congress.

The ceremony, attended by the President, the Senate, the House and the Supreme Court, was a formality. The treaty had already been approved by both houses of Congress.

The pact will go into effect on December 4, 1979, the 100th anniversary of the completion of the Panama Canal.

The treaty was signed by President Jimmy Carter and President Aurelio Rodriguez Torrijos of Panama.

The treaty, known as the Panama Canal Treaty of 1977, was negotiated by the United States and Panama in 1977. It was ratified by the Senate in 1978, and by the House in 1979.

The treaty will give the United States a 10-year lease on the Panama Canal, beginning in 1979, and a 40-year lease on the Panama Canal, beginning in 1990. The lease will be renewable for 40 years, and the United States will pay $1 for the lease.

The treaty will allow the United States to use the Panama Canal for military purposes, and to use the canal for the defense of the United States.

The treaty will also give the United States the right to use the Panama Canal for the purpose of defense.

Fire safety measures taken in Old Armory

By GREG WINTER

Old Armory, which for 110 years has been the fire safety standard of Iowa City buildings, is now being overhauled by the university. The renovation will include alterations to the present fire safety system as well as new systems.

"This is a major project," said UI student Dan Beatty. "We need to improve the fire safety of the building before it is too late." The renovation project is scheduled to be completed by the end of the year.

Apartments hard to sublet

By JIM CORPUS

Renters who want to sublet their apartment for persons looking for apartments just for the summer should first check with their landlord before subletting. Handley said. After checking with the landlord the renter should then contact the landlord to send the subletting application.

"Sometimes it's difficult to sublet to persons wanting to sublet apartments hard to sublet apartment," said Sen. Winter. "It's difficult to sublet to persons wanting to sublet apartment hard to sublet apartments.

Renters, according to Iowa City's rental services. "You might bluff other people, but you can't bluff me. We can have an election without this bill," said Sen. Winter. "I can win without this bill.""
Terrorism

On a global scale, terrorism has significantly decreased the last twenty years. In fact, according to the International Crisis Group, the world has become safer from terrorism, especially in Europe and North America. The decrease in terrorism can be attributed to a number of factors, including increased international cooperation, improved intelligence sharing, and enhanced counterterrorism strategies.

The downing of a passenger jetliner over Ukraine in 2014 has brought the issue of terrorism to the forefront of international news. The crash of Malaysia Airlines Flight 17, which was downed by a Russian-made missile, killed all 298 people on board, including 196 Dutch citizens. The crash has sparked widespread outrage and increased pressure on Russia to investigate and hold accountable those responsible for the attack.

Botulism victims improving; specific cause not yet known

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Medical in tigators tracing the cause of a number of hospitalizations and later deaths in the Seattle area, were no closer to an answer to the mystery today than they were yesterday.

The problem is a type of food poisoning being investigated by the Centers for Disease Control.

The latest victim was a 73-year-old woman who died Monday of botulism, according to a statement released by the agency.

Botulism, which is caused by a bacterium that produces a neurotoxin, is rare but can be fatal. It is often associated with canned foods, particularly those that have been improperly processed or stored.

The CDC is working with state health departments and other agencies to investigate the outbreak and determine the specific cause of the illness.

The agency is urging people to inspect their canned food products and throw away any that are unsafe or if there is any indication of spoilage.

In the meantime, the agency is advising consumers to check their canned food products for any signs of spoilage, such as bulging or swollen cans, an off odor or taste, or any other changes that might indicate contamination.

The CDC is also advising people to wash their hands thoroughly after handling canned food products.

Snail darters dying out fast

Washington (UPI) - The Supreme Court refused Monday to block the environmental protection agency's approval of a dam project in Tennessee because there is no longer a strong argument that the project will wipe out a species listed as endangered.

Environmental groups had challenged U.S. District Judge Frank Colson's approval of the Tellico Dam on the Tennessee River above the almost-complete Hiawassee Dam.

Judge Colson said factors such as the $10 million already spent on the dam should be considered in an environmental impact statement that was never made.

The statute bars the court from issuing a preliminary injunction during the trial of an action in which the district court has already ruled against the plaintiff.

Colson gave no indication whether he would consider the case on the merits.

Federal prosecutors opposed any legal hold on the project because all evidence suggested it would not wipe out a species listed as endangered.

A spokesman for the environmental protection agency said the decision was a "triumph嘎 " and would lead to a natural recovery of the fish.

Environmentalists say 38,000 snail darters are dying each year.

Colson said the environmental protection agency's approval was based on a misrepresentation of the fish's habitat.

He said the agency had suggested that darters would survive in a river pool if the stream were diverted into a reservoir.

The judge noted that when the fish were removed from the Hiawassee, the Tennessee River above the pool was dry.

"The record is replete with evidence that the fish will be wiped out," Colson said. "The act of seeming rationality is the worst possible form of judicial absurdity."
For Tinie Bentsen, the advent of spring means one thing—gardening. And the fact that he and his wife, Myron, have spent most of their 70 years in the north Texas oilfield town of Lufkin has not kept them from enjoying the garden life. Bentsen’s years in the Navy, during which he served aboard the battleship South Dakota during World War II, left their mark. He suffered from arthritis and gout, and his life as a gardener was restricted to small spaces. However, the advent of retirement has provided him with the opportunity to cultivate his passion for nature.

Bentsen’s garden is a labor of love, and he takes great pride in maintaining it. He plants his vegetables and flowers with great care, always ensuring that they receive the proper amount of water and sunlight. His garden is a testament to his dedication and hard work, and it is a source of pride for both him and his family.

Despite the challenges that come with gardening, Bentsen remains committed to his craft. He enjoys the process of watching his plants grow and flourish, and he takes satisfaction in the knowledge that his efforts have contributed to the beauty of his garden.

For Bentsen, gardening is not just a hobby, but a way of life. He finds solace in the tranquility of his garden and the peace that it brings. He is dedicated to maintaining his garden as a sanctuary, a place where he can escape the stresses of daily life.

Bentsen’s garden is not just a personal project, but also a symbol of the importance of nature in our lives. It serves as a reminder of the beauty and wonder of the natural world, and it invites others to appreciate and enjoy its beauty.

In conclusion, Bentsen’s garden is a testament to his dedication and love for nature. It is a reflection of his passion for gardening and a reminder of the importance of maintaining a connection with the natural world. It is a place of beauty, tranquility, and peace, and it serves as a source of inspiration for all who visit it.

For the two-week urine collection experiments, Kennedy said he had to collect his patients' urine at home, and not at a lab. Eighty percent of the patients opted to collect their urine at home because of what it was and what if was said a three-hour period was too wide a time frame for them.

Because Kennedy had to make up 48 to 52 of the patients in his sample, and since his sample had been chosen from a pool of patients, he had to set aside a weekend for the test. The sample was analyzed "by hand in a cup" if it worked. Tremmel said that the patients' urine was sent to a lab, and the researchers were "surprised that more people used the coercion, In other words, they quit the study and didn't return for their next test."
Re-entry draft worries Kuhn

ATLANTA (UPI) — Commissioner Bowie Kuhn said Wednesday that the current free agent re-entry draft in professional baseball's biggest minor league is going well. "The fans of the minor leagues have been shown through some thought not to have much interest in it," Kuhn said. "I don't think there's any precedent or any reason why we should continue it."

Kuhn's comments came in response to a question about the draft, which was initiated by major league owners last year in an attempt to stem the flow of talent to the minors in the wake of an arbitrator's ruling on the reserve clause. The draft allows teams to select players who have been rejected by major league clubs.

"I don't see any purpose in it at all," Kuhn said. "I think the fans have been shown that they don't want it."

Kuhn said he had been in contact with league officials about the draft, and he was told that it was not going to be continued.

"I don't see any reason why we should continue it," Kuhn said. "I think the fans have shown that they don't want it."

NCAA denies lobby charge

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The chairman of the House Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations said Friday that the NCAA's lobbying efforts in Washington have been minimal.

"We've reviewed the documents, and there isn't much activity," said Rep. Jim Leach, R-Iowa, who heads the subcommittee. "I think it's a reasonable estimate of what's going on." Leach said the NCAA's lobbying efforts are not focused on voting on legislation, but rather on getting its views across to members of Congress. Leach said the NCAA's efforts are aimed at influencing policy makers and providing information on the association's position on various issues.

The NCAA has been lobbying Congress on issues such as anti-doping, drug testing, and rules enforcement.

"It's a very active organization, and they're doing it in a very professional manner," said Leach.

However, the Internal Revenue Service has not approved the NCAA as a tax-exempt organization, which means it cannot engage in political activity.
